

SPOKESMEN OF BIG INTERESTS DISCUSS NEW ENGLAND LABEL

Former Secretary of Boston Publicity Bureau Recalls the Work Done by That Organization.

HATTERS FOR PLAN

Each Trade Should Foster Own Business, Thinks a Clothier, Instead of All Combining.

Here's What a Successful Publicity Man Had to Say Of Booming New England

STAMP a "Made in New England" mark on every article that leaves your mill. Paint it on your shipping cases. Paste it on your packages. Plaster the country with it. Make it your slogan and back it with such merit that "Made in New England" will be a synonym for made right, distributed right and sold right.—From speech made by ERMAN J. RIDGWAY at the joint dinner of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Pilgrim Publicity Association at the Hotel Somerset, Feb. 26.

The plan to place a label "Made in New England" on goods of New England manufacture seems to be growing in popularity among the manufacturers about Boston, and a general desire is shown on their part to enter into any advisable unified project to advance the business and standing of commercial houses in this section of the country.

There are some, however, whose special limitations and circumstances, in regard to the form in which they send out their products, or whose particular attitude to the advertising of their goods prevents them from entering into such a scheme as proposed.

Thomas F. Anderson, secretary of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, points out that the plan of putting a "Made in Boston" trademark was promulgated two years ago, by the City of Boston Publicity and Information Bureau, when he was its secretary.

The design then used was a seal, with a picture of Bunker Hill monument on the left and on the right a factory. Bunker Hill monument typified the history of Boston and the solidity of its manufacturing industries.

The publicity and information bureau at that time issued a municipal advertising pamphlet, containing information in part as follows:

"Boston with its nearness to the Atlantic seaboard, its admirable rail and water transportation facilities, its splendid climate, its abundance of skilled and unskilled labor, the second port in the United States, and the nearest large American port to Europe, possesses wonderful possibilities as a manufacturing center.

"Its advantages as a manufacturing city have, until recently, been rather overlooked by its own people, and although it at the present time has something like 3000 manufacturing of different kinds, annually producing goods valued at about $200,000,000, both the number of these and the value of their product might be vastly increased.

"Although the city and its numerous suburbs have grown at a phenomenal rate during the last quarter of a century, there are still in Boston many millions of square feet of vacant lands suited to manufacturing purposes of almost every kind.

"With an entire continent back of it and 20 steamship lines to carry its products directly to Europe, Asia and South America, the Boston manufacturer need never lack a profitable market for his goods. Boston is the center of the wealthiest and best-purchasing community in the United States. There are 3,000,000 people residing within a 50-mile radius of it. Greater Boston alone has a population of 1,250,000.

"The piano and the sewing machine were developed in Boston, and this city led in the manufacture of shoe machinery. It was Boston capital that built the first power loom, and it was here that flint glass was first successfully manufactured in America. In Boston, too, nearly 60 years ago, the first watches in America were made, and in Waltham, a section of Greater Boston, today, is one of the largest and finest watch factories in the world.

"No other city has one fourth the number of shoe and leather establishments. Three billions pairs of shoes have been shipped from Boston since 1869. New England has 1000 shoe and leather and collateral industries, with $100,000,000 worth of goods annually. New England is the shoe and leather center of the world."

PLEASANT PATHS.

This glad old world, we all discern,
Has lots of sunshine in it
For every mortal who can learn
To do his "smile a minute."

It may be that President Taft will finally decide to follow the German Emperor's example and take all of his law-makers on a sea voyage. Perhaps a threat to maroon the "insurgents" on some lone sea island unless they promise to support the administration bill would help the President in getting things to a focus.

A LAY OPINION.

Easton—Seems to me the judge's sentences are rather severe.
West—Yes, he is a man of strong convictions.

The people of Germany are much interested in a new design of airship which is to carry from 50 to 60 persons and to fly at from 40 to 50 miles an hour. It is to be named the "Trier," after the town where it is being built. Every one will hope that the "Trier" will never have to try in vain.

THE DIFFERENCE.

Have wealth and the world will shake your hand
In any sort of weather,
But tell the world you've lost it and Twice "shake" you altogether.

The big colleges have already begun training their oarsmen, each of the institutions entreating the hope that it may develop the winning eight, and all of them realizing that without lots of practise they cannot expect to have a crew over which they can crow.

LOGIC IS LOGIC.

Humpty—I like the plan of your new house first rate, but why did you make your sleeping rooms so small?
Dumpty—Well, the chief reason was because it will take less fresh air to fill them, don't you see?

QUESTIONS OF THE HOUR.

Why clamor for more battleships?
Who is it that is shouting war?
Can men with hatred on their lips
Tell what they'd go to battle for?
And why can't concord-loving men
Who'd dwell in peace with friend and brother,
Fence "jingoos" by themselves and then
Just let them war on one another?

Governor Hughes insists that nothing shall be hushed or hidden in the investigation now going on at Albany. Governor Hughes hews to the line let the chips fall where they may.

England seems more than likely to win the twelfth annual chess match by cable which she has played with America. Naturally, the residents of a republic would not be likely to know so much about kings and queens and knights and castles as do men who are brought up in the atmosphere of such things.

FIGURES OF SPEECH.

Wiggs—What is the true meaning of the term "matrimonial noose"?
Briggs—Oh, that is the thing with which a man is "lass"-soed.

London now has a bank officered and conducted exclusively by women and wherein no men will be allowed to transact business. However, money earned or produced by men will not be refused if offered for deposit by their wives.

Although the bakers, the milkmen, the grocers' clerks and others on whom depends the distribution of the people's food supply were ordered out on strike enough of them remained at work to give the Philadelphians their Phil.

Cannon is Overthrown in a Test Vote

DRAMATIC SCENE IN THE HOUSE

Text of Speaker Cannon's Ruling Today.

SELDOM has a more dramatic scene been witnessed in the House than at the conclusion of the speaker's ruling, as he stood pale-faced but resolute upon the marble rostrum and under the great flag of the nation slowly uttered these words:

"Planting himself upon the law made for the House by Speaker Randall, appealing from the passions of this day to the just reasons of that day, the chair sustains the point of order and holds that the resolution is not now in order."

The precedent on which Speaker Cannon made the ruling against the Norris resolution occurred on Dec. 13, 1878, when Roger Q. Mills of Texas tried similarly to change the rules of the House.

Half Million Dollars Paid for Hals Family Portrait

Banker Otto H. Kahn Gives Record Sum for Picture Now on Exhibition.

THE FRANZ HALS FAMILY GROUP, A FAMOUS DUTCH PAINTING. Painting for which record price was paid is one of first art works to be brought to the United States duty free under new tariff provisions.

NEW YORK—One half million dollars, a record high price for a painting, has been paid for the celebrated life-size portrait of Franz Hals, the Dutch painter, and his family, painted by himself.

The great work of art will be on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum in this city commencing today. The purchaser was Otto Kahn, the banker, who secured the portrait from the Duveen brothers. J. P. Morgan bid between $250,000 and $400,000 for the picture.

The painting was brought to this country only a few weeks ago, and since then a number of millionaires and art galleries have been trying to purchase it. Mr. Kahn will lend the painting for exhibition to other public art galleries throughout the country after the Metropolitan exhibition. It is one of the first really great European masterpieces to be brought to this country duty free under the new tariff provisions.

The painting comes from the collection of Colonel Warde of Westerham, Eng., where it had been held since 1759, unknown to the general public, which had no opportunity to view it until it was exhibited at the Royal gallery a few years ago. As the painting is a portrait of the painter and his family, it possesses a documentary and historic interest. It shows five full length figures and is 79 by 112 inches in dimension. Franz Hals was born about 1580 at Antwerp. For vigor of expression, directness of vision and fearless handling, he has always been regarded both as one of the world's greatest portrait painters and technicians.

In 1832 the picture sold for $250 in a London auction room. The work of Franz Hals has frequently commanded unusual prices. Not long after 1870, "The Laughing Cavalier," one of the most famous of his pictures, was bought in Paris by Lord Hertford for $10,000. More recently $125,000 was the price of a canvas. In connection with the sale of the Hals portrait, it is interesting to recall that Holbein's portrait of "Christina of Denmark" was sold last May by the Duke of Norfolk to an art dealer for an American client for $305,000, with the provision that if within the following month the portrait should remain in the national gallery, to which it had been lent by the owner. This plan was realized.

ALBANY WELCOMES THE PRESIDENT AND CANADA'S GOVERNOR

ALBANY, N. Y.—With American and British flags appearing on all sides, and the city taking on a holiday appearance, Albany this afternoon welcomed the President of the United States and for the first time in its history the Governor-General of Canada in the person of Earl Grey.

President Taft with his party arrived from Rochester at 2:30 o'clock. At the station were Governor Hughes of New York and Mayor McEwan of Albany, who was a classmate of the President at Yale. As the President emerged from his private car he was greeted by the pair and escorted to the executive mansion, accompanied by troop B of the national guard.

At five o'clock the party will leave in automobiles for a visit to Watervliet arsenal, several miles from the city. Tonight the President will speak at a dinner given by the University Club. Earl Grey arrived this afternoon to attend the University Club dinner. He was escorted to the Ten Eyck hotel by a battalion of the tenth regiment. The Governor-General will remain in Albany until tomorrow night.

The President today took up his study of the Canadian tariff situation, which will be threshed out at Albany tonight. Mr. Taft, W. S. Fielding, who is the Canadian minister of finance, and Earl Grey

LIGHTSHIP CALLS PASSING VESSEL

The Standard Oil Company's tug Standard, bound from New York to this port, in response to a call from Pollock Rip Shoals lightship, No. 73, ran down to the light vessel today and is believed to be bringing a message for the light-house officials here.

When the tug was off there the international code letters "C. L." were hoisted in the rigging of the lightship. "Am disabled; communicate with me." The tug remained alongside a few minutes and then resumed her passage. She will arrive in Boston late today.

GIVE LONGFELLOW MEDAL ON MONDAY

The presentation of the Longfellow medal to the Cambridge pupil who has qualified by the best essay on some subject in connection with the life and works of Longfellow will be made by Richard Henry Dana at the Brown and Nichols school, Garden and Berkeley streets, on Monday at 12:30 o'clock. The winner will read his essay, and there will be an address by Mr. Dana as president of the Cambridge Historical Society. Interested persons are invited to attend the exercises.

CADETS OF BOSTON SCHOOLS EAGER FOR SPRING PRIZE DRILL

Boston school cadets are eagerly making preparations for their annual prize drills in Mechanics hall. The first drill to be held is that of the English high school, the afternoon of March 31, following that will come the Latin school drill, April 1, and finally the drill of the suburban schools, April 15.

The significance of the drills is that the regimental officers then chosen will participate as such in the annual field day, May 27. On that day a parade through the city will be followed by a feast on the Common.

The regiments are assigned as follows: English high, the first and third regiments; Latin school, the second regiment; suburban schools, the fourth and fifth regiments. The fourth regiment is made up of two battalions from Dorchester and one from South Boston; the fifth regiment is composed of a battalion from Brighton, one from Charlestown and East Boston, and one from Roxbury and West Roxbury.

The committees for arrangement, for the prize drills are as follows: English high, first regiment, Capt. Alexander B. Martin, Capt. Franklin G. Field, Lieut. James J. Donlan, Lieut. Ernest T. Sae

REPUBLICANS PLAN A REBUKE TO PARTY IN THE FOURTEENTH

Old line, rock-ribbed Republicans who for more than half a century have been staunch supporters of Republican principles are planning one of the greatest rebukes that has ever been administered to the Republican party by supporting Eugene N. Foss, Democratic nominee, for Congress in the fourteenth Massachusetts congressional district next Tuesday, as against William R. Buchanan, the Republican nominee.

These old line Republicans who, as they declare, are to digress from the regular party ballot for the first time, are doing this as much out of regard for Judge Robert C. Harris, the defeated Republican candidate for the nomination, and for ex-Gov. John L. Bates as for anything else, although the tariff and the federal administration are also big issues. In the fourteenth congressional district ex-Governor Bates is held up as one of the greatest Republicans that Massachusetts has ever had, and Judge Harris is referred to as "the idol of the district," as was his father before him, and the feeling occasioned by his defeat in the Republican caucuses has aroused an extremely strong opposition, of which an expression is promised on Tuesday.

Underlying all else, it is expected, will be an expression of the Republican unrest in Massachusetts, and one of the first open outbursts against the old party lash which has been wielded with such success heretofore in the district.

Republicans of many years standing are preparing to do this on Tuesday and many who cannot bring themselves to this point are exhibiting an unusual apathy on this occasion which, Foss supporters declare, would in itself do much toward reducing the Republican plurality in the district.

This contest, which has assumed nation-wide aspects, and which is closely watched by the entire country, really draws the line between local and national affairs very closely.

To the voters of the district, most of whom are residents of small country sections, Democracy and Republicanism have little to do with the present campaign, and because of this sentiment the Republican machine will have a hard task to pull the election through.

INSURGENTS SWEEP ALL BARRIERS ASIDE AGAINST OLD REGIME

Agree to an Hour and a Half Debate for Each Side on the Norris Resolution, When Final Vote Will Be Taken.

CRISIS IS AT HAND

It Is Admitted on All Sides That the Adoption of the Question for New Rules Committee Is Inevitable.

A debate on the Norris resolution, following the defeat of Speaker Cannon on his adverse ruling, started in the House at 2:30 p. m. today.

The "insurgent" and "regular" leaders agreed to limit debate to three hours, one and one half hours for each side.

The adoption of the Norris resolution, de-throning Mr. Cannon as "the czar of the House" is conceded to be inevitable.

Consideration of Norris resolution taken up by House at 2:55 p. m. today. House earlier defeated motion by Mr. Dalzell to lay Mr. Norris' appeal from Mr. Cannon's decision on table, by 181 to 164.

Mr. Norris' motion ordering previous question, thus preventing debate, carried, 182 to 160.

Speaker's decision against Norris resolution overruled, 182 to 160.

Speaker Cannon at 12:50 p. m. today sustained the Dalzell point of order, the contention being that the Norris resolution is "unconstitutional."

The speaker thereupon began to read his carefully prepared opinion to maintain the old rules committee.

Representatives Dalzell and Mann prevented a compromise between the "allies" and "regulars" by demanding that the speaker be made a member of the rules committee.

WASHINGTON—Speaker Joseph G. Cannon suffered his inevitable defeat at the session of the House this afternoon when his ruling on the point of order against the Norris resolution was overruled by the House by a vote of 182 to 160.

Previous to this a motion by Mr. Dalzell that the appeal by Mr. Norris from Mr. Cannon's decision, be laid on the table was defeated by 181 to 164. Sandwiched in between was the carrying of a motion by Mr. Norris ordering the previous question, thus effectually blocking debate and showing a desire of the insurgents and the Democrats to get at the Norris resolution as soon as possible. Consideration of this resolution, which abolishes the present committee on rules and provides for a committee of fifteen eliminating the speaker—was taken up at 2 p. m.

A vote on the resolution is certain to be carried, and may be put this afternoon or before the House adjourns.

Mr. Cannon's ruling on the point of order was rendered soon after the House reconvened at 12:05 p. m. today, and was based on the judgment that it was not privileged under the constitution. The speaker's decision having been overruled by a vote of 182 to 160, Olmstead (Rep., Pa.) in the chair ordered the clerk to read the Norris resolution. Mr. Norris then rose and asked Mr. Dalzell (Rep., Pa.) if he would be willing to agree that debate on the subject should be closed at the end of three hours, one and one half hours for each side. Mr. Dalzell replied that this would be "perfectly satisfactory."

Seldom has a more dramatic scene been witnessed in the House than at the conclusion of the speaker's ruling, as he stood pale-faced but resolute upon the marble rostrum and under the great flag of the nation slowly uttered these words: "Planting himself upon the law made for the House by Speaker Randall, appealing from the passions of this day to the just reasons of that day, the chair sustains the point of order and holds that the resolution is not now in order."

The precedent on which Speaker Cannon made the ruling against the Norris resolution, occurred on Dec. 13, 1878. "This identical question arose in the House," said Mr. Cannon. Roger Q. Mills of Texas proposed as a question of constitutional privilege, exactly as is proposed today, to offer from the floor for immediate consideration, a proposition looking to the amendment of the rules. And when objection was made to the amendment, as it is made today,

Leading Events in Athletic World

Yale Gymnasts Win Title

DARTMOUTH TENNIS TEAM WILL BE MADE UP FROM VETERANS

All of Last Year's Champions Again Eligible for the New England College Championships.

SCHEDULE IS NAMED

HANOVER, N. H.—With a tennis team composed of the same men who won the New England intercollegiate championship last season to again defend their name, Dartmouth is looking forward to what promises to be a most brilliant season. Never in the history of the intercollegiate league has a team accomplished what the Dartmouth team did last year. Starting, as it did, in fourth place and ending the season by tying the Williams aggregation for the lead of the league is no small accomplishment, and to repeat this performance in the coming season means the winning of the eight-point intercollegiate cup.

Aside from the showing made in the intercollegiate, the Dartmouth contingent scored a victory in all but one of its dual matches, and in the latter the best that the Williams team could do was to score an equal number of points. The schedule for the coming season is a much more difficult one, as dual meets have been secured with Yale and Princeton and there is a strong possibility that the management will arrange for a match with either M. I. T. or Cornell. The intercollegiate for the coming season promises to furnish some real excitement. It will be the ninth year of the series for the eight-point league cup. Dartmouth, Williams and M. I. T. are at present tied for the lead, with six points each, and the winning of two points by either team means the winning of the cup. Last season Dartmouth scored 2½ points, and as the makeup of the different teams, with one exception, will be the same as that of last season, the outlook at Hanover is exceptionally bright.

The schedule is as follows: May 7, faculty at Hanover; 12, Yale at New Haven; 13, Princeton at Princeton; 14, Springfield Country Club at Springfield; 21, Williams at Hanover; 23-26, intercollegiate at Longwood; 30, Amherst at Hanover; 31, Vermont at Hanover.

Other than the members of last season's aggregation, a wealth of new material has reported for practice, and the coming trials will be most closely contested is the general expectation. The men who composed last year's team are Capt. S. B. Smith '10 of Troy, N. Y.; P. D. Brooks '10 of Charlestown, N. H.; H. A. Wolf '10 of New York, N. Y.; and F. H. Harris '11 of Brattleboro, Vt. Among the other candidates who are showing up well are F. C. Eaton '11 of Auburndale, Mass.; A. A. Ricker '10 of St. Johnsbury, Vt.; W. S. Thompson '10 of Chicago, Ill.; A. C. Buell '12 of Wellesley Hills, Mass.; S. H. Clark '12 of Auburndale, Mass.; W. H. Childs '12 of Manchester, N. H.; R. L. Steiner '12 of Boston, Mass.; and G. W. Wheeler '12 of Braintree, Mass.

The men will report at daily practice in the old baseball cage until the courts are in suitable condition, at which time the trials will be played off.

DONLIN NOT TO PLAY WITH N. Y.—Ex-Captain Donlin will not play with the New York Nationals. He sent his final decision Friday night by wire to President John T. Brush. Donlin and his wife have arrived in Boston from Toronto with the "A Certain Party" company, which opens at the Majestic Monday next.

KEEFE COACHING U. OF MAINE NINE

Prospects of Turning Out a Strong College Team Seems Very Bright—McHale Is Captain.

ORNO, Me.—The University of Maine feels very fortunate in obtaining P. O. Keefe to coach the baseball team this spring. Coach Keefe is a man widely known in baseball circles. He has played with the Norfolk and Atlantic team of the Southern league and Baltimore of the Eastern league, while last season he was captain and manager of the Pittsfield (Mass.) team. He has coached with great success the Williams College team for the past four years and great results are expected from his work at the university this spring. He arrived this week and at once took charge of the battery men who have been working out in the cage under the direction of Captain McHale.

Although it is yet too early in the season for predictions, it does not look as though Maine's weak point would be in the box or behind the bat. Captain McHale '11 and Smith '11, last year's fine battery, are both in good shape and will probably do the bulk of the work although by the way the new men are showing up they will both have to be in their best form to hold their positions. Besides McHale, Libby '10 and Danforth '10, both of whom pitched last spring, are out, as is Winn '12, who pitched for the second team last year. Of the freshman pitchers Richards '13, the former Bangor high captain, Murray and Gale, who pitched for Westbrook seminary last year, all look to be of varsity material. For catchers, Smith '11, one of the best men who ever represented the blue and white behind the bat, will be the mainstay while Hardy '10, who caught a number of games last year, will prove a worthy substitute. In addition to these veterans Connors of the 1908 team is back in the law school and is expected out. Carter, a freshman from Bar Harbor, and Jackson of last year's second team all look like promising men. The main squad has not yet started regular work, but a large number of men are out practicing in the gymnasium and in the cage.

BOSTON NATIONAL NINE DRILL FAST

AUGUSTA, Ga.—The Boston National baseball nine was put through a fast drill today on account of there being no practice tomorrow. The Augusta team that is using the same park for practice that the Boston team does has decided to change its drilling hours from 12:15 o'clock to 2:15 o'clock and from 4 to 6 p. m., thus allowing the practice of the Boston team to go on without interruption.

Low Rittellie, the pitcher whom the Boston nine secured in midseason last year from the Philadelphia team, started in work Friday that surprised the manager of the Nationals. He did some excellent work and has shown that he is able to pitch a nine-inning game without any hesitation. A week from today the local team will play a game with the Boston nine, and the announcement shows that many Augusta people are looking forward to the game with great anticipation.

The infield lines up for practice with Beck at first base, Shean at second, Sweeney at short and Getz and Conney alternating at third. Lake says it is altogether too early to compare Getz and Conney yet. Liese, the new outfielder, is practicing in center, but Manager Lake says that he may play him in right or left field when the exhibition trip starts.

REGULARS WIN BASEBALL GAME

Harvard Nines Meet for the Second Time This Season Outdoors in a Five-Inning Contest.

The Harvard varsity and freshman baseball squads met Friday in an out-of-doors combat for the second time this season. The regulars defeated the yannigans 4 to 2 in five innings. The batteries on both sides worked throughout the entire contest without change, so that only seven men were at the bat on each side. The best hitting was done by Bolton, from Milton academy, who was on the freshman team last season. He made two singles in four times at bat. For the first time MacLaughlin, Potter, DeWindt, Kennedy and Lanigan also got hits, while the yannigans only Haydock, Marshall and Ferguson succeeded in getting to first on safeties.

Three pitchers from the freshman squad did all the pitching—Marsh, Barthold and Felton. Felton made the best showing. He is from Milton academy; Barthold comes from Exeter and Marsh from Cambridge Latin school.

DeWindt, who has been making a good showing in the varsity outfield, will not be able to practise for about a week.

The batting order was as follows: Regulars—Lanigan 3b, DeWindt, Aronson 1b, Kennedy 1b, Minot rf, Potter, Marshall 2b, Bolton cf, MacLaughlin ss, Yannigans—Carr 3b, Wilby, Johnson 2b, Haydock 1b, Marshall, Gibson ss, Hann, Angell 1b, Ferguson, Conant, Harvey cf, Paul, Ferguson, Kenney rf.

There is a prospect that McKay who was reported to be irrevocably on probation, may be able to arrange his studies with the college authorities so that he will be available for the varsity later. Perhaps he will be able to go on the southern trip in the middle of April. The success of the team this year depends a great deal on McKay, as otherwise Hicks is the only pitcher on the varsity who will be good for the important games. None of the promising varsity pitchers have been allowed to do any pitching outdoors yet, and the freshmen who have been used are also being held back. Besides Hicks and McKay, the freshman pair of last year, Babson and Ernst, look like good men to be kept through the season.

SMITH SOCIETIES CHOOSE MEMBERS

NORTHAMPTON, Mass.—The Smith College French Club has elected the following members: From 1911, Katherine Burrell, Edith Angell; from 1912, Helen Northup, Dorothy Bennett. The Blue Pencil Club has elected the following juniors to its membership: Marjorie Kilpatrick, Isabel Guilbert and Helen Hongman.

The elections to Telescopium are: From 1911, Ruth Barnes, Elizabeth Faber, Marjorie Kilpatrick, Jean Cahoon; from 1912, Ellen Caverno, Ethel Waite, Mary Koehler, Katharine Martindale, Laura Wentworth.

YALE OUT OF ANNUAL MEET

NEW HAVEN—Yale will not be represented at the annual tournament in Philadelphia tonight, having withdrawn from the Intercollegiate Wrestling Association.

This action was taken following the meeting of the executive committee in New York on Tuesday, when W. A. Goebel and Captain Sweeney, of Yale, were declared ineligible to wrestle in the intercollegiate meet.

BOSTONS HOPE TO WIN ANOTHER

Third Game of Practise Series With Cincinnati Nationals at Hot Springs Results in a Nine-Inning Tie.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark.—With two victories and a tie out of three games played to date the Boston Americans are looking to still further victories in their practise games with the Cincinnati Nationals here. To date the Bostons have showed much better form than their National rivals and unless something very unexpected turns up, Manager Donovan should have a lively lot of players in fine condition to begin a strenuous battle against the Detroit and Athletics for the leading places in the American League race.

The third game of the series was played Friday and resulted in a tie score, each team having 2 runs to its credit when the managers called time at the end of 9 innings. Cincinnati outbatted their opponents for the first time this year, but the hits were not as timely as those made by Boston. Lord made the most hits for his team while McLean excelled for Cincinnati.

Boston used Karger, Elman and Steele in the box while Griffith tried out Anderson and Cheeney. All of the pitchers showed up well so early in the season. The summary:

YALE CAPTURES ANOTHER TITLE

PRINCETON, N. J.—Yale athletes captured another indoor championship title Friday night when they won first honors in the annual intercollegiate gymnastic tournament here. The Yale men scored a total of 21 points, which is 5 better than Princeton, which finished second. Rutgers finished third with 8 points, Pennsylvania fourth with 5 points, Columbia fifth with 3, and New York University next with 1 point.

J. O. Kelly of the University of Pennsylvania captured the individual championship with the fine total of 216 points. He was closely pressed by Meltzer of Columbia and T. F. Clark of Princeton, who finished second and third respectively, their scores being 215 and 212. The summary:

Horizontal bar—T. F. Clark, Princeton, first; Belcher, Yale, second; Callahan, Yale, third.
Side horse—Menns, Yale, first; Coyle, Princeton, second; Wheeler, Columbia, third.
Parallel bars—Everard, Yale, first; Ruge, Yale, second; Meltzer, Columbia, third.
Flying rings—Pope, Princeton, first; W. W. Lord, Yale, second; E. C. Clark, Yale, third.
Club swinging—Nelson, Rutgers, first; Briggs, Rutgers, second; Russell, New York University, third.
Tumbling—Kelly, Pennsylvania, first; E. C. Clark, Yale, second; Meltzer, Columbia, third.

MARSHALL AWARDED GAME.

NEW YORK—F. J. Marshall has been awarded a victory in his unfinished game with J. H. Blackburne at the top board in the recent Anglo-American cable chess match. A message has been received by the Brooklyn Chess Club from the City of London Chess Club, in which the latter club acknowledges the hopelessness of the English master's position. This makes the total score of the match 4½ to 3½ in favor of the British, but it is not at all likely that the Americans can increase their score by the addition of even a draw.

HARVARD PLAYS SOCCER IN N. Y.

NEW YORK—Columbia and Harvard will play an intercollegiate soccer match on South field this afternoon. It will be Columbia's first home game of the season, and, judging from the contest that the New Yorkers had with the Harvard eleven last spring, it should be one of the best matches of the season. With two exceptions the Columbia team is the same that won the intercollegiate championship last spring.

C. A. C. TO HAVE LEAGUE.

A baseball league, comprising teams from the coast artillery companies in Boston harbor forts, is being formed. They will have a regular schedule of games. A team picked from all the nine companies will also arrange dates for games with teams in and around Boston and with the soldiers of the artillery district of Portland.

PRELIMINARIES FENCED TODAY.

The preliminary rounds of the Intercollegiate Fencing Association, which were originally scheduled for Friday, will be held this afternoon. Each team will be composed of three men and the two best teams will meet in New York next Friday for the finals.

OFFERS TROPHY FOR MOTOR BOATS

American Power Boat Association Gives Third Grand Challenge Cup—For 32-Foot Class.

NEW YORK—The American Power Boat Association will put up a new silver challenge cup for high-speed boats not over 32 feet in length very shortly, according to a recent statement by Morris M. Whitaker, secretary of the association. This makes the third grand challenge cup offered by the organization, the other two being the gold challenge cup now held by the Thousand Islands Yacht Club, and the bronze 20-foot cup held on the Mississippi.

Mr. Whitaker said, "These facts indicate to what extent the association has helped so far to promote racing." Steps are now on foot to readjust the association's long-established rating formula to meet the demands of the modern boats and bring the formula abreast of present conditions.

"To that end all the clubs forming the association—and they extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to the Gulf—have been asked to give their actual experience with the formula as now in force. The leading naval architects of the country have also been asked to make suggestions as to changes and betterments. So, when a special meeting of the association is called to consider the matter, as will be the case, changes will be determined upon that will produce the desired result.

"The association has in view, also, the formation of restricted classes, boats of given length in which the maximum power and the minimum weight will be fixed, so as to secure boats which will be rational high-speed runabouts, strong enough to last through several seasons of hard use and so designed that they cannot be made back numbers by newer boats of abnormal power.

"The restrictions will be rigid enough so that a boat's racing career will not be limited to one season. Through the cooperation of the clubs forming our association it is hoped to bring about racing among those boats from widely varying sections of the country."

WILL DISMANTLE THE VOLUNTEER

NEW YORK—Capt. Charles Barr, owner of the Volunteer, the last America cup defender of Boston ownership, has announced that it is to be broken up. The lead, the spars and some of the fittings will be removed from the old sloop in a few days, and the hull will be disposed of for service as a houseboat. The work of dismantling will be commenced early next week at the vessel's present berth, Morse's yard, foot of 56th street, South Brooklyn.

Edward Burgess in 1887 designed the Volunteer. In 1891 she was lengthened and was rigged as a schooner, but in 1894 was rigged as a sloop. Just before this, in the fall of 1893, General Paine sold the Volunteer to J. Malcolm Forbes. J. Malcolm Forbes used the Volunteer under sloop rig until 1904. Captain Barr purchased the yacht last year from the Forbes estate.

FRESHMEN WILL NOT RACE NAVY

The Harvard Annapolis Academy freshman crew race, which was to have been rowed on the Severn on April 21, the same day as the varsity race, was today finally canceled by the Harvard management. Coach Wray believing that the freshmen will not be sufficiently developed to row a match race so early in the season.

There will probably be several shifts in the make-up of the first freshman eight before the last race, but the present combination will be given a thorough try-out.

The order is as follows: Stroke, Goodale; 7, Parmenter; 6, Cutler; 5, Keays; 4, Lincoln; 3, Moffat; 2, Stratton; bow, Meyer.

HARVARD MEN OUTSIDE AGAIN.

The Harvard baseball squad held its second outdoor practice Friday, and, as on the first day, a game was played between the first and second teams. The varsity won out by good hitting, by the score of 4 to 1. The line-up of the first team was some different from that of the first day out, but they played the same fast game, and the hitting is much better.

ELECT LACROSSE CAPTAINS.

The election of captains for the Harvard four class lacrosse teams took place Friday. They are as follows: P. H. Leavitt seniors, P. C. Nash juniors, P. Gustafson sophomores, L. A. Noble freshmen. The annual interclass series of games will begin next Friday with a contest between the seniors and juniors.

AMERICANS WIN AGAIN.

HAMILTON, Bermuda—The Philadelphia cricket players won a game from a team made up of members from the army and navy by a net score of 84 Friday. The Americans in their first inning scored 176 and in the second 100, while the local players in their first session made 107 and in the second 85.

PRELIMINARIES FENCED TODAY.

The preliminary rounds of the Intercollegiate Fencing Association, which were originally scheduled for Friday, will be held this afternoon. Each team will be composed of three men and the two best teams will meet in New York next Friday for the finals.

RATIONAL GOLF

By Jason Rogers.

There is only one thing more remarkable than the extent of the thought and ingenuity that are applied to the invention of new clubs and the improvement of old ones for playing the game of golf, and that is the general state of discontent and dissatisfaction among the players as the result of it all, and the entire absence of anything in the nature of a general and fixed idea as to what will yield the best results, says Henry Leach in the London Field. To no game have all the resources of invention been so unceasingly applied, but we are as far now from any settled convictions in this matter as we were 10 years ago, and shall almost certainly be still as far 10 years hence. We are not likely even then to have attained to the standards that are absent now. Still, through it all any one who makes a close analysis of what is being done, and of what has been achieved, and adds some investigation among the makers of clubs, may see that there are certain general tendencies at work, which must ultimately have effect. One season the chief part of public attention is given to the question as to which is the best form of putter, a question which must, in the nature of things, be quite insoluble since it depends entirely upon the individuality of the player, and his confidence in his club. Another season the irons, and particularly the mashie, have attention, next the brassie and the cleek, and again the driver.

In the new season that is opening it would appear that there will be more or less pronounced developments in every direction, but especially among the wooden clubs, and what is happening to these is of special importance, inasmuch as some change in style of play may be involved. Four or five years since there was something of a craze for wooden clubs with steel faces, but that quickly died out. About the same time the idea was promulgated that longer shafts would yield greater length of drive, with an easier swing. So the "fishing-rods" came in, but they are never seen today. They were too difficult of employment, and accuracy and certainty of stroke were sacrificed by using them. Since then the drivers have enjoyed a time of peace and rest, and seemed to be settling down to something of a standard with the steel shafts and the small heads and faces which set in about the time of the introduction of the rubber ball, or a little earlier. But last season there was a new vogue of more generality, distinction and effect than usual. What have come to be called the "dreadnought" drivers created more of a sensation than any club had done since Mr. Travis won the amateur championship at Sandwich with a Schenectady putter.

The idea, indeed, was not entirely original, but it was so, so far as the present generation of golfers is concerned, for it is 20 years or more since the old and somewhat similar Bap drivers were employed and speedily given up. One old club was found among some golfing ruins at Wimbledon about the beginning of last year, and from this discovery the dreadnought arose, and its fame was established when Robert Maxwell won the amateur championship with it last year. In passing, it may be said that Mr. Maxwell believes in it as much as ever, and still always plays with the original type, the features of which are a large head and a very whippy shaft, the spring of which is not all in one place, and that at the middle or below it, as is usual with other drivers, but all through, and more particularly high up, so that it can be plainly felt under the grip.

Hardly less than a full week's trial is necessary to understand the club, for it calls for an entirely different swing from that employed with other drivers. The club has to be humored. The swing back must be slow and the return slow until nearly on the ball. The swing, in fact, needs to be more of the old-fashioned, long and most accurately timed, golfing swing than the short, snappy hits which the most modern school of players frequently apply to the ball. Thus if the dreadnoughts become general as the enthusiasts are certain they will in time, the general style of play must be affected and not for the worse.

Now there is the question of those stiff-shafted dreadnoughts, which certainly some excellent players favor. But these lack that feature of the original which is its essence, and those who have mastered the original and are now its slaves, including the reigning amateur champion, cannot but be convinced that favor is given to the stiff shafts only because sufficient trial was not made of the others and their difficulties overcome. The large wooden head serves to give confidence to the player and a delightful "feel" of the ball to the club and in passing it may be said that there never was any justification for the small-headed and small-faced drivers; and whatever effect the dreadnought may have upon the game it has almost certainly abolished those small heads, for wooden clubs of all varieties are being given greater hitting spaces this season. But with the real dreadnought the shaft is certainly the thing and almost, but not quite, the same effect might be gained with a smaller head weighted up to the right point with lead. We say almost, because the dreadnought, being slenderer and lighter in the shaft, needs more careful balancing in the head and this is best done by size and wood, and that is almost certainly why the big head was put on in the first place.

There are other certain changes, less remarkable perhaps, but hardly of less consequence, going on in relation to most of the other clubs that the golfer carries.

It may not have occurred to many players, but when they come to think of it they will probably decline, and there is good reason for its being so. The brass-soled club was first used at Blackheath in the middle ages of golf because of the punishment which the gritty floor of the course gave to the wooden clubs of the players there. But in these days of luxurious golf the smooth fairways do not injure a sole of wood, and to the majority of players the brassie was never a comfortable or easy club to use, and was always made with a head and face too small and a general feel of clumsiness. Men preferred to use their drivers through the green whenever the lie gave them a chance of doing so. Then the rubber ball has been so much improved lately that men who can really hit need a wooden club for their seconds only at comparatively few holes unless they have wind against them; they can get almost if not quite as far with a cleek as with a brassie, and so when they do really need wood for the second they prefer to take their drivers and "chance it."

From this state of affairs it is natural a compromise should be arrived at, and for the last season or two a new idea has been creeping in which will be found to be in great vogue this coming season, namely a semi-brassie, as it might be called, which is exactly like the driver, but has the face laid back a trifle more, and a little strip of brass instead of horn or vulcanite on the edge of the sole enabling the club to pick up the ball more cleanly. Certainly this club is better for present purposes than the old brassie, and it is much easier to use and better in results.

Then a change is being made in all the irons. For the most part there has been a slow and certain tendency to make them with more upright faces than was the case when the gutta ball was used, since that which has taken its place rises more easily, enabling a straighter face to be employed and yielding greater length. But in the case of the mashie there is a change in the other direction. For years past the deep-faced clubs have been the principal vogue, but opinion or fancy seems to be turning against them. It is being said that their faces are too straight, and that they are less easy to pitch with than mashies with shallow faces well laid back. So these latter are now setting in strongly again, and one of the best and most popular models has the weight thrown well down to the sole.

BOY ATHLETES IN MEET TODAY

The Boston school regimental athletic meet was held this afternoon in the South armory, Irvington street. The games began at 2 p. m.

Boston English high won last year with 51½ points, Mechanic Arts second with 13½, and is counted on to win the meet this year, but by no such prohibitive margin. The school has led the Boston teams for six consecutive years now.

The games were run off as follows:

ORDER OF EVENTS.
60-yard dash, trials; junior shot and jump.
45-yard dash, trials.
60-yard dash, semifinal.
45-yard dash, semifinal.
B. L. S. class team races.
45-yard low hurdles, trials, semifinals and final.
300-yard run, trials.
1 mile run; senior shotput and jump.
60-yard dash, final.
45-yard dash, final.
600-yard run, senior.

Again Named for Big Tourney

NEWPORT (R. I.) CASINO, GROUNDS WHERE TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS WILL BE HELD IN AUGUST.

NEW YORK—Tournament dates for the big tennis meets of the year were considered by the executive committee of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association in this city Friday night, and the applications from several clubs for membership acted upon.

That this year is going to be the largest in the history of the association as regards tournaments was shown when the committee was asked to make assignments for nearly 150 dates. Last year 114 were arranged for.

Philadelphia again gets the woman's national championship which will be played on the courts of the Philadelphia Cricket Club at Wissahickon Heights late in June. The men's all comers' tournament, beginning with the challenge championship match in doubles, will be played at the Casino, Newport, R. I., as usual, on Aug. 16 and the following 10 days.

The Longwood tournament at Boston, the New England at Hartford, the Middle States at Orange, N. J., and the Meadow Club at Southampton, L. I., will be given the same dates as usual. As heretofore, the collegiate meetings received the early dates. Wherever possible, the committee is seeking to avoid conflicting dates in the same city or the same part of the country. The official list will be made public within the next 10 days.

Of the new applications for membership the majority came from the South and West. In the West the newly instituted clay court championship will probably be played at the Omaha Field Club Sept. 5. The preliminary tie matches for the National doubles championship again go to the Onwentsia Club of Chicago, instead of the Crescent Athletic Club at Bay Ridge, L. I.

Speaker's Power Is Overthrown

Mr. Mills argued: "It is the constitutional privilege of a House of Representatives to adopt rules at any time; it is a continuing power of which the House cannot divest itself." The members of the House did not agree with Mr. Mills, and James A. Garfield objected that it was proposed to carry the power in this respect further than the constitution justifies. If the position of the gentlemen were correct, a member could at any time interrupt our proceedings by bringing in a proposition for the amendment of our rules."

"The great Democratic speaker, Samuel J. Randall, heard the arguments for and against the claim of Mr. Mills and decided that the proposition to amend the rules was not a case of constitutional privilege. There was criticism, grave criticism of the rules in those days, but no man in that House thought of appealing from a decision so consonant with reason."

At the conclusion of the speaker's ruling Mr. Gaines (Rep., W. Va.), moved to adjourn, but was voted down by a large majority.

Mr. Norris then appealed from the decision of the chair, and Mr. Dalzell moved to lay the appeal on the table. On this a roll call was demanded.

Thirty-five Republicans Voted Against Mr. Cannon

The allies won their first victory of the day over the regulars at 1 p. m., when the House, by a vote of 181 to 164 refused to lay on the table the appeal of Representative Norris from Speaker Cannon's decision that his resolution amending the rules was out of order. Mr. Norris then moved the previous question on the appeal, having for his purpose the calling off of debate and on this a roll call was ordered.

The following 35 Republicans voted against Mr. Dalzell's motion to lay the Norris appeal on the table: Ames, Mass.; Carey, Wis.; Cooper, Wis.; Davidson, Wis.; Davis, Minn.; Fish, N. Y.; Fowler, N. Y.; Gardner, Mass.; Gronna, N. D.; Hansen, Ia.; Howland, O.; Hayes, Cal.; Hinchey, Neb.; Hubbard, Ia.; Kendall, Ia.; Kinkaid, Neb.; Kopp, Wis.; Lenroot, Wis.; Lindberg, Minn.; Madison, Kan.; Martin, S. D.; Miller, Minn.; Morse, Wis.; Murdock, Kan.; Nelson, Wis.; Norris, Neb.; Pickett, Ia.; Poin-dexter, Wash.; Stearnson, Minn.; Taylor, O.; Volstead, Minn.; Wood, Ia.

All Recognize the Sign of Speaker Cannon's Fall

"That beats Uncle Joe," chorused 50 members in a stage whisper as the speaker announced the vote of 181 to 164 on the Dalzell motion to lay Representative Norris' appeal on the table.

Although the enemy was over the breastworks and had possession of "not only their guns but their ammunition, and their commissary supplies as well," the regulars fought grimly on, conceding no more than an inch at a time and throwing every obstacle known to parliamentary craft in the path of the victors.

After Mr. Norris' motion ordering the previous question, and thus eliminating debate on the appeal from the speaker's decision had been carried, 180 to 160, a roll call was ordered on the question as to whether the speaker's decision should stand as the decision of the House.

"No conclusion has been reached. The fight will go on at noon."

This was the official announcement made at the conclusion of the conference of leaders of the allies and regulars after a two-hours' session this morning in the effort to reach a compromise on the rules question.

The conferees all asserted that the situation was exactly where it had been before the consultation began. Representatives Dalzell of Pennsylvania and Mann of Illinois were the men who prevented a compromise from being effected. They insisted that the speaker should be a member of the rules committee no matter how large or how small, powerful or how weak it should be made.

Representative Martin of South Dakota, the author of the resolution changing the rules committee to 10, six Republicans and four Democrats had expressed the opinion that it might be better if the speaker were not included in the membership of the committee. All the other conferees with the exception of Messrs. Dalzell and Mann would probably have agreed to the elimination of the speaker, but they stood firm to the end.

After a session that lasted until early morning, the regulars conceded their defeat so far as the enlargement of the rules committee conceded. On their side the insurgents consented to the abandonment of the plans for the topographical division of the country into groups, which should select the members of the rules committee.

Both were ready to accept a rules committee of ten, six of whom should be selected by the majority caucus and four by the minority. In the event of this plan going through it was the understanding that the insurgents would have two members on the committee of rules, Representatives Norris of Nebraska and Gardner of Massachusetts. With this arrangement in effect, the insurgents agreed to go back into the Republican caucus, reserving their rights to disagree from the mandates of the caucus so far as legislation is concerned.

A resolution by Representative Martin (Rep., S. D.), regular, providing for the proposed committee of 10, was made the basis of today's negotiations, after it had been decided Friday night that some of its provisions were acceptable all around. As prepared by Mr. Martin it was silent on the question of the speaker's membership in the committee on rules, merely providing that the committee should select its own chairman. Today Mr. Martin carried into the conference a new section, providing:

"That after March 3, 1911 (the expiration of Mr. Cannon's present term as speaker), the speaker shall not be eligible to membership on the committee on rules."

While practically the Martin compromise would make a rule for the next Congress, technically, by naming March 3, it would go into effect on the last day of the life of this Congress. It was worded in this way so that if at the opening of the next Congress a motion to adopt the rules of this Congress should be carried the speaker would not be eligible to a place on the committee on rules.

The Martin resolution was also coupled with an unwritten proviso that, as a matter of fact, Mr. Cannon would not be a member of the proposed new committee on rules. To this the speaker entered an emphatic objection.

The insurgents, agreeing that this section would refer only to succeeding congresses which this Congress cannot control, took the ground that it left Speaker Cannon with the very power they have wanted to take away.

Mr. Cannon, himself, rejected the compromise measure when it was submitted to him early today, regarding it as offering an indignity to the position which he holds.

There were, however, on both sides and even among the Democrats, many members who were disposed to accept the compromise.

After the conference the insurgents withdrew to the committee room of Representative Gardner of Massachusetts in order to try to reach an agreement on what they would demand of the House.

The rumor was rife about the capitol shortly before noon that the "organization" had secured enough votes to win, with the vote of Speaker Cannon, but this was strenuously denied by the insurgents.

"They did not offer us anything," said Representative Mann, "they wanted us to give up everything and grant nothing in return."

"How will it come out?" Mr. Mann was asked.

"I think we'll be beaten," replied the stalwart Cannon henchman. "At least that is the way it looks to me now."

"Every proposition they offered was a humiliation to the speaker," said Mr. Tawney (Rep., Minn.). "We were not willing to accept any such compromise or to make such a proposition to Mr. Cannon."

After the conference had failed, Messrs. Dalzell, Mann, Tawney, Smith of Iowa, and former Congressman Watson of Indiana, called on the speaker and told him the result.

Shortly thereafter a rumor spread through the capitol that Mr. Cannon was preparing to abdicate.

The insurgents agreed in their conference, just before noon, to stand as one man against allowing Mr. Cannon to remain on the committee on rules. They also agreed to stand for a committee of 10 members, six elected by the majority party and four by the minority party.

It was also declared that, before they would go into the Republican caucus, they would demand a "gentleman's agreement" with the regulars, that the insurgents should have two out of the six Republicans on the new rules committee. This would give them Messrs. Gardner and Norris.

As early as daylight a steady stream of people began to pour into the capitol. The public galleries were filled before 9 o'clock, and so crowded were the halls that police were stationed on the stairs and no one was allowed to go up unless he had a special card for one of the galleries. All the galleries were jammed full by 11 o'clock. A large proportion of the spectators were women.

Speaker Cannon was greeted by a tremendous cheering from the regulars when he ascended the throne of the House at noon. Nearly every member was present and many joined in the Lord's prayer, led by the chaplain.

The galleries were packed to the doors, and thousands of men and women thronged the corridors and stairways unable even to get a glance inside of the House chamber, while scores of senators, ex-senators and ex-members grouped themselves in the open spaces of the House and banded themselves four deep behind the brass railing at the rear of the members' seats.

Seeking to Determine Real Insurgent Plans

The attitude in the final test of the 12 insurgents who voted with the regulars late Friday afternoon to postpone action until noon today, a move temporarily to the advantage of the beleaguered "Cannonites," was a matter of some speculation early today. They were much sought last night by rival leaders eager to learn where they would stand in the big round-up. One and all, however, protested that they were still under the flag of the allies and would be found on the firing line when the battle was renewed.

The wit and resourcefulness of Mr. Cannon and his veteran aids, however, and the tremendous influences at their command, that have invariably served them to win any kind of a fight in the past, were forces that the generals of the allies fully appreciated.

Another element of possible danger to them lay in the uncertainty whether all the Democrats will stick. Conferences were held Friday night and before the time of the session today by each of the belligerents to sound those suspected of being weak-kneed, and to guard against ambush by the opposition.

Appeal to the President to Coax Over Insurgents

Insurgent leaders, following these conferences and flushed by their uniform success in the various skirmishes, expressed confidence that they would be able to dictate terms of capitulation to the regulars.

They said that they might not hold out for every detail of the Norris resolution, but that if they made any concessions it would be due, not to a lack of strength, but because such action might prove to be the best thing for the party.

Wires from Washington to Rochester, the temporary abiding place of President Taft, were burdened Friday night with messages from the House leaders urging him to "save the party" by persuading a few insurgents to climb over the fence into the Cannon reservation. The arguments were as fetching as the wit of shrewd and experienced leaders could fashion. The petitioners were hopeful that Mr. Taft would throw out a lifeline. Should the President choose to bring pressure to bear there might be a break of some extent in the insurgent ranks.

Then there are the so-called Fitzgerald Democrats, a band of 23 Jeffersonians who broke up a raid on the rules by going in with the "Cannonites" a year ago. The insurgents had figured that, with solid Democratic support, they could make over the rules completely. Just as this seemed certain, Fitzgerald (Dem., N. Y.) arose and proposed a few changes in the rules.

Fitzgerald Democrats See Their Glory Fading

They were far from meeting the insurgent program, but went far enough to kill the insurgent raid, and with a combination of Messrs. Cannon, Dalzell, Payne and the rest of the regulars and the Fitzgerald Democrats, the modified rules were adopted.

It did not add anything to the popularity of the seceders with the Champ Clark or regular democracy, but it made Mr. Cannon their grateful and generous friend.

If the proposed compromise of the Norris plan were adopted the Democratic members of the new committee on rules would be chosen in a Democrat caucus. There the Fitzgerald democracy would be in a hopeless minority, and it is not figured that they would get much. All of which is taken to explain the fact that there are a few Democrats who have not had a deep heart interest in the battle to uproot the speaker and the present committee on rules, of which Mr. Fitzgerald is a member.

Ten Regulars Appear on the Scene of Strife

At 4 o'clock Tuesday, when the House reassembled, the situation had changed somewhat. Ten additional regulars whose votes were needed, and who had been summoned by telegraph by the "ship," had shown up. They were Messrs. McCall of Massachusetts, Simmons of New York, M. E. Driscoll of New York, Moon and Tener of Pennsylvania, Denby of Michigan, Nye of Minnesota, Burk of Pennsylvania and Folger of New York.

The Republicans also brought in Parsons of New York, sometimes a near-insurgent. The Democratic strength had been increased by the arrival of Rhinock of Kentucky, Alexander of Montana, Talbot of Maryland, Boehme of Indiana, Pou of North Carolina and Hobson of Alabama. The latter came down from Boston.

Almost a full membership was in attendance when Mr. Cannon called the House to order again at 4 o'clock. The crisis of the great third act of the drama seemed at hand, and as it was not known then that it was to be a four-act play, excitement was so thick that it could have been cut with a cheese knife.

Whack, went the Cannon gavel, bang, bang, bang. The House came to order, like a troop of trained animals.

There stood the speaker, Napoleon Bonaparte and Mr. Micawber rolled into one, hoping against hope that he could muster a majority, and determined to go down fighting if he could not.

Mr. Cannon Announces That He's Ready to Rule

"The chair is ready to rule," said the speaker, and the air was rent with a storm of applause. In his hand the speaker held a typewritten statement of his position, his parliamentary reasons, prepared by Asher Hinds of Maine, why he sustained the point of order raised by John Dalzell against the Norris resolution.

The contents of that typewritten sheet are still officially a secret. The speaker has not yet announced his decision. Before he could begin Mr. Tawney of Minnesota was on his feet with a motion to take a recess until 11:55 Saturday morning. A point of order from the Democratic side was sustained by the speaker.

Then Mr. Gates of West Virginia caught the Cannon eye. He had a motion directing the speaker to postpone the announcement of his decision until 12:05 o'clock Saturday afternoon. This created pandemonium.

Fight for Adjournment Delays Chair's Ruling

Mr. Underwood of Alabama, who, by the way, may come out of this great fight as the logical candidate of the House Democrats for the speakership if they win the next elections, instantly offered as a substitute a motion to direct the speaker to make his decision at once. Against this motion Mr. Gaines made a point of order, which Speaker Cannon sustained.

"The chair is ready to rule unless the House decides to postpone the announcement," quoth Mr. Cannon, wagging his gray whiskers without a speck of guile in his make-up.

A roaring shout went up that made the corridors echo.

"Rule! rule! rule!" roared the Democrats and the insurgents.

Mr. Underwood made a motion to lay the Gaines motion on the table, but a few minutes later withdrew it, and demanded a vote thereon. It was a tense moment. Mr. Clark of Florida, who wanted to get his name in the Record, probably to show that he was really present, nearly mused up things by making two motions which would have sidetracked the main issue. But he subsided, and a roll call was ordered on the Gaines motion to postpone the announcement of the speaker's ruling until five minutes after noon Saturday.

Continuous Twenty-Eight Hour Session Is Closed

The motion prevailed, ayes 164, noes 150. This vote delayed for another day the smashing of the House machine, although it probably does not mean that the machine is in any less danger. Fourteen insurgents voted one more day of grace, but they did it apparently not because of any wavering, but because they wished time for further conference. These insurgents were: Messrs. Gardner of Massachusetts, Hinchey, Stearnson, Hayes, Davidson, Ames of Massachusetts, Fish, Woods, Miller, Volstead, Folger, Kinkaid, Kendall and Pickett.

A motion to adjourn was then made and, after transacting some routine business demanding immediate attention, the House at 4:40 o'clock adjourned, after having been in continuous session for 28 hours and 40 minutes.

Easter Millinery Presentation

Not only will next week's showing be of the newest models imported, but hats will be shown identical with French hats and duplicating them in point of style and fineness of materials at one-half the cost of the imported hats.

Their importations of French and Viennese millinery materials this year are five times those of any previous season.

Features of the display will be the new colorings with their brighter tints introduced by the famous theatrical presentation of Rostand in Paris.

Dress Hats $25 to $100 Semi Dress Hats $15 to $48 Tailored Hats $10 to $38

Suits Dresses Gowns Coats

The Easter presentation includes many exclusive styles not shown before and many of the hand-somest garments are impossible of duplication.

The assortment of beautiful tailored and dress suits far exceeds in number and variety any former presentation by this establishment and in dresses for house, street and evening wear, the stock is double that of former years. The number of styles in silk dresses alone covers the entire range from 28.00 to 250.00.

LAST CANNON STAND TODAY IN HOUSE

Some little comment was caused by the fact that Representative Mann of Illinois, one of Mr. Cannon's lieutenants, and one of the committee of regulars which had been trying all day to effect a compromise with the insurgents, voted against the Cannon motion to postpone action. Mr. Mann would not explain why he did it. It was declared that Speaker Cannon was sincere in saying that he was ready to rule, and that the motion of Mr. Mann to postpone was a surprise to him. Nevertheless, on the motion to postpone the speaker himself voted "aye," which is significant.

Assents the Insurgents Are Standing Unshaken

Mr. Mann probably voted "No," so that if the motion had been beaten he would be in a parliamentary position to move to reconsider.

The insurgents were confident at the close of the day that they had lost none of their strength. Representative Hamilton Fish, after adjournment, said that the insurgents mustered 33 votes.

"Every one of them is standing firm," he said. "There is no sign of weakness or wavering among them. Some of us thought best to allow another day for discussion of the question before submitting it to a vote. This is why some of us, including myself, voted for the Cannon motion to postpone the announcement of the speaker's decision on the point of order."

"We will make no compromise which does not recognize our claims for a new committee on rules to be elected by the House, and upon which the speaker shall not have a place."

The lull in the long battle was apparently welcome to both sides, although there was not a cheer of victory from either.

The hands of the big clock above the speaker's desk pointed to the hour of 4:48 when the speaker put the motion to adjourn and a general chorus of ayes came from the Republican side. The Democrats had no protest and there was no answer to the call for the noes.

The House, for the first time in the present session, had almost its full membership on the floor. When the speaker's gavel fell the members rose from their seats and filed out through the littered aisles and in five minutes the scene of the record-breaking endurance struggle was cleared of its 400 participants, the galleries were emptied of the hundreds of spectators who have occupied them constantly for nearly 30 hours, and only a score or so of janitors moved about cleaning up the evidences of the fray.

No Congress of Recent Years Has Such a Record

No such series of scenes have been witnessed in a Congress in recent years. The performance embraced every element from the serio-tragic effort to wrest from the speaker the chief source of his power to the songs, jokes and jests that the members bandied during the long hours of vigil. Always there was the bone of contention between the two opposing sides over which they fought and wrangled fiercely, but for hours at a time the scene took on the aspect of a comic opera, and laughter and applause ruled the House.

What of the result? The unusual and almost inexplicable ending caused a thousand questions as to the meaning of the armistice. Did it mean that the regulars had won over enough of the "insurgents" to obtain a truce and time enough to rally their forces and form some new plan of action? Or were both sides glad of an opportunity to defer the final struggle for a few hours and give all a chance to freshen themselves for it?

DEBATE IN HOUSE THIS AFTERNOON

WASHINGTON—Speaker Cannon in making his ruling on the Daltzell point of order, which was later defeated, said:

"Today the chair is asked to permit a proposition for a new rule to come in, although the rules prescribing the order of business require us to proceed to other matters. It does not seem to the chair that there is any constitutional mandate which would justify the overriding of the rules. Fortunately in this crisis the chair is not compelled to rely on his own judgment, awayed as he might be by the passions and purposes of this hour. He can look back to another hour, when in a day of calm, the navigators who steered the business of this House took their attitude and longitude unembarrassed by the exigencies of tempest."

"The pathway of the chair has been blazed not by any flushed majority in the moment of factional success, not for any ends of one political party as opposed to the wishes of another political party, not under auspices which prejudice the chair because of memories of political affiliations of his own, but on a question of order raised by a great Democratic floor leader of this House and decided by a great Democratic speaker."

At 3 p. m. the debate in the House was still in progress.

Representative Norris offered as a substitute for his resolution one prepared by Mr. Martin (Rep., S. D.), which increases the members of the rules committee to ten with six members of the body from the majority and four from the minority parties of the House. The substitute also eliminates the speaker as a member of the rules committee.

According to a provision of the substitute resolution the new rule shall go

Grievances Against Speaker Cannon

Democrat and Insurgent Claims in House Conflict

It is claimed by the Democratic and insurgent Republican members of the House that Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, through the selection of a small committee on rules, has arbitrarily assumed direction of all legislation in the national House. The speaker appoints the committee on rules, of which he is one of the members, and no legislation to which it is opposed can be supported by the majority.

The present committee on rules consists of five members—Speaker Cannon, John C. Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Walter I. Smith of Iowa, Champ Clark of Missouri and John J. Fitzgerald of New York.

The Democrats and insurgents say this committee is unrepresentative of anything but the will of the speaker, and that its rules have been arbitrarily fixed by the speaker, and against the interests of the majority of the House and against the interests of the country.

The opponents of Speaker Cannon fought for the adoption of a resolution, drawn by Representative Norris of Nebraska, amending the rules so that the committee on rules shall consist of 15 members, representative of all sections of the country, and of both parties; nine to be of the majority party and six of the minority.

In the present House of Representatives there are 224 Republicans and 169 Democrats.

President to Be Jewelers' Guest

TRIO TO ESCORT PRESIDENT TAFT TO BANQUET.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The annual banquet of the New England Manufacturing Jewelers and Silversmiths Association, which is to be held Monday night, March 21, will bring together the largest number of jewelers ever gathered together in this country, coming from all parts of the United States.

President William H. Taft, Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, Senator George Peabody Wetmore, Governor Aram J. Pothier and Mayor Henry Fletcher will be special guests and speakers at the banquet, and preparations on the most elaborate scale have been made for the occasion. Representative Harry Cutler, ex-president of the association, will be toastmaster. It has been found necessary to limit the number present to between 700 and 800.

The effect of the new tariff upon the jewelry industry will be the subject of Senator Aldrich's address, and it is expected that his remarks will be of great value in that respect.

On the morning of March 21 President Taft will attend an important meeting of the Yale corporation in New Haven, and he will come from there to this city in a special car, arriving at 7:25 o'clock.

Henry G. Thresher and Harry Cutler, former presidents of the association, will go to New Haven to escort the President here and President George H. Holmes, now the head of the association, will meet the party at the station in Providence and act as an escort to Infantry hall, where the banquet is to take place.

The banquet will be the best served in Providence this year and will cost $15 a plate. Gold souvenirs will be given to each guest.

EVERETT TALKS OF A CITY HALL

The problem of selecting a suitable site for a municipal building for the city of Everett now seems near solution. Everett has never had a building of its own for use as a city hall, although the proposition has been discussed many times.

It is now proposed to take over the entire Barnard estate on Broadway and Maple avenue and erect upon it a city hall and a 24-room schoolhouse, which must be built within the next two or three years. It would be possible by taking this land to secure a well-arranged group of three buildings, because in the southeast corner of the estate Palestine lodge, A. F. & A. M., has secured an option on a parcel of land upon which it proposes to erect a Masonic temple.

The Masonic building committee, of which Mayor Bruce is chairman, has expressed its willingness to cooperate with the city.

RADCLIFFE GIRLS SING IN CONCERT

A concert was given at Radcliffe College Friday night by the choral society for the benefit of the scholarship fund supported by that organization. The concert took the place of the usual operetta given at the college. The concert was attended by more than 300 of the students and Cambridge society folk. Mrs. Gallison, the instructor, the leader, Miss Emily S. Coolidge '08, and the soloist, Miss Irene Floyd '11, received especial praise. Other singers were Misses Mary Riley, Marion Moreland, Eleanor Richardson, and Pauline Logan.

ASKS RIVERBANK SUBWAY CHANGE

Edgar S. Dorr, one of the sewer authorities for the city of Boston, expresses the opinion that all possible sewer troubles caused by the building of the proposed Riverbank subway can be avoided by locating the new tube nearer the basin than is contemplated in the plans as they stand at present.

If the present plan is followed, it is the opinion that it will necessitate the construction of costly syphons to convey sewage past the point of the subway.

Girls' Success in Shakespeare Plays Wins Notice

LIBRARY CLUBHOUSE CAST IN "AS YOU LIKE IT."

AN excellent performance of Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice," given this month at Mr. John L. Gardner's Fenway palace by an all girl cast from Library Clubhouse, of 18 Hull street, drew the attention for the first time of a large number of persons to this club.

The widespread influence of the drama on modern life has found a most interesting expression in this group of young women of the Library Clubhouse, who are known as the Players' Club.

The foundations for this acting club were laid nine years ago, when as young scholars in the grammar school the group began studying and presenting little plays, either historical sketches, arrangements of fairy tales, or stories capable of dramatization.

Following these simple exercises in memory and action came a somewhat careful study of "As You Like It," which proved pleasing to a large audience and stimulating to the taste and imagination of those taking part.

The costumes which the girls made with help were copied from old prints of costumes worn at the Covent Garden theater of London. Though of material costing not over 19 cents per yard they were most effective. No scenery was necessary since the play was acted in the old Shakespearean style.

Background and wings were formed of young hemlock trees, and piles of brush proved convenient seats for the actors.

Study of the play occupied spare hours during the spring, summer and fall, from April to November, when the play was given in the hall of the North Bennet Street Industrial School. During the summer the girls rehearsed in the grounds of Mrs. Storow's place at Kendal Green, two large rocks marking entrances and exits and clumps of barberry bushes representing dressing rooms.

No sooner was this first attempt pronounced a success than copies of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" were bought and the young players revelled in the beautiful imagery and expression of this charming fairy tale. The costumes were little trouble, all the gentlemen wearing large squares of soft-crape draped in after the Grecian style. The clowns wore dull colored denim tunics and the fairies low-necked, short-sleeved muslin frocks. The stage setting was the same as in "As You Like It."

Fairy and clown dances were well done and the play, though longer and more difficult to present smoothly than "As You Like It," held the close attention of an appreciative audience for the entire time. In the early fall this play was given out of doors at night in Mrs. Storow's grounds at Lincoln.

"The Merchant of Venice" was the club's next choice. This play required frequent conferences over lines capable of interpretations widely differing in meaning. Often the natural sense of the players caused them to "better the instruction" of their leader.

Costumes were copied from prints of old Italian dress and harmonious colors chosen after many visits to different shops and consideration of individuals and groups with regard to actual stage conditions.

To see what could be done to overcome a certain stiffness on the stage, the entire cast went to see the Ben Greet company play "The Merchant" and thus gained instruction.

This play was presented twice in North Bennet street school hall and once in Mrs. Storow's grounds at Lincoln. Again this month, after three years, it was given by courtesy of Mrs. John L. Gardner in her beautiful concert hall at Fenway court. Priceless tapestries in soft blues and browns formed an ideal background, against which the graceful figures of the young players arrayed in soft-colored tunics and flowing capes stood out—not too sharply. Indeed, one almost felt, when the groups were for any space of time motionless, that they were also embroidered with magic art on the rare woven hangings.

In 1908 the club undertook the difficult task of presenting "Hamlet." For 18 months, whenever they found time, individual study went on. Mirth provoking happenings continually enlivened rehearsals. Hamlet demanded that at all times every one should "suit the action to the word," and rehearsal with him went something as follows:

Clown—But age, with his stealing steps Hath claw'd me in his clutch And hath shipped me into the land As if I had never been such.

Hamlet (aside)—Come, throw up that skull, can't you? How's anybody going to act without any actions? (The clown gravely goes through the motion of throwing up the skull and Hamlet goes on.) That skull had a tongue in it and could sing once: how the knave jowls it to the ground. (Aside) Jowl it, can't you? etc., etc.

At the dress rehearsal Laertes appeared in the wrong costume, a tunic which had been spoiled. The front view was correct, but the back had the effect of a swallow-tail coat, rendering even the most solemn passages so absolutely absurd to the prompter, who had always this back view, that she was in danger of entirely losing command of her voice. Fortunately a prompter's services are seldom called for as the players are gifted with fine powers of memory.

The leader of the group says that she considers the value of this study cannot be overestimated. In answer to a question as to whether it ever led girls to take acting as a profession she replied, "Never; the real stage demands outward manifestation of illusion and calls for the support of one or more stars by a number of people unremembered after the program is destroyed; no outward illusion beyond that of costume aids us and no one part is more carefully worked out than another."

"We strive to have the impression of a complete whole, from which no scene nor character could be divorced without detriment to the unity of the piece; then too all those taking part are already earning good salaries in chosen professions and this is merely a happy pastime, a pleasant means of making part of ourselves the best the world has to offer in literature."

"As a means of inculcating discriminating taste and desire for the best in art and literature I cannot speak too highly of the benefit to be derived from the thoughtful study and careful presentation of great plays."

central figures in the very novel colored wash petticoats that have already become popular in Paris. Very charming are those in pale blue and pale pink lawns with wide flounce of "broderie Anglaise" in white stitching; these fasten too in a very novel way—instead of the regular tape draw string, a row of half-inch beading is found and, by this means all bulkiness is done away with and in addition the skirt hangs better.

Lace trimmed wash petticoats do not figure strongly this season, those in blind embroidery in hand scallop and in plain hemstitching being more popular, and another thing is that where the fullest styles used to be popular, now the narrower skirts are the ones that sell best, in Paris at least. Never have ribbons been more used on underskirts than this season; even on the cheaper garments one finds bows, and rosettes of colored ribbon.

The little colored princess petticoats or slips for children from two years are being shown in all the shops in Paris now; these are made straight and narrow and have three wide flounces at the bottom. Many of the white underskirts for women, that is, from $5 up, have a colored dust ruffle under the outer flounce.

Silk petticoats are entirely out of favor in Paris now. Everything is of the wash order.

RAINFALL IN AUSTRALIA. ADELAIDE, South Aus.—Good rains have fallen, it is reported, throughout South Australia, especially in the far north and northern territory, where a fall of 12 inches is recorded. This is considered to be the best rain for pastoralists since 1881. From Victoria also come reports of very good general rains.

THE HOUSEKEEPER

Hints That May Help.

SKIRT WITH TUNIC

Skirts that are made with short pointed tunics and full skirts are exceedingly smart and this one can be made adapted to the street or the house, as it is cut long or short. It is extended just a little above the waistline, doing away with the necessity of a fold, and it is altogether attractive in the extreme. Serge in the new shade known as blonde is the material illustrated, but all skirtings and all suitings are appropriate for the design, for it can be used for linen and materials of the sort as well as it can for wool, pongee and the like. There is a foundation to which the plaited side portions are attached and over which the tunic is arranged.

6610—Eight-Gored Plaited Skirt with Tunic. 22 to 30 waist.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 12½ yards 24, 10½ yards 27, 6½ yards 44 or 6 yards 52 inches wide.

The pattern may be had in sizes from 22 to 30 inches waist or 39 to 49 inches hip, and both measurements ought to be given when ordering skirts. Address same as number 6614.

RAISINS AND HOW TO COOK THEM.

Raisins, like prunes are delicious, when returned to their original form as nearly as may be possible. Soak them and simmer: them as you would a prune. There are uses to which raisins are adapted which are beginning to be appreciated. The following recipes convey some of the new ideas. Try them; you will like them.

RAISIN BREAD.

Ordinary home-made bread dough; mix half a pound seeded raisins for each two loaves of bread and bake in the usual way.

RAISIN SANDWICHES.

Chop fine one-half pound seeded raisins and one-fourth pound walnuts together. Mix with a little mayonnaise dressing and spread between well-buttered pieces of steamed bread.

BAKED RAISIN PUDDING.

Put eight ounces of dripping into a basin; warm it, and work in one pound of flour mixed with one teaspoonful of baking powder. Add one teaspoonful of ground mixed spice, one ounce of candied lemon peel cut up small, four ounces of moist sugar and six ounces of seeded raisins. Mix them well and make the whole into a paste by adding two eggs beaten up in a teacup of milk. Turn the mixture into a well-greased tin or dish; put in a moderate oven and bake for an hour. When done take it out, turn the pudding out of the tin or dish, sprinkle it over with caster sugar and serve.

BOILED RAISIN PUDDING.

Put one-half pound each of seeded raisins, flour and shredded beef suet into a basin, mix them, add gradually one breakfast cupful of milk and a couple of well-whipped eggs. Place the mixture in a flour cloth, tie it up securely, or put it into a buttered basin, cover with a cloth, place it in a saucepan of boiling water, and boil from two hours and a half to three hours, by which time the pudding should be done. Turn it out and serve.

IN THE SHOPS OF ADVERTISERS.

The "Green Room" is the name of a new room which has been fitted up at the store of the Leopold Morse Company at Adams square. This room, attractively trimmed in green and white, has become the headquarters of the juvenile and boys' departments. Here can be found suits, furnishings, headgear—everything that a boy needs in the way of clothing.

The latest designs in spring hats, shoes, furnishings, suits and overcoats can be found in the various departments of this store. Suits and spring overcoats in young men's sizes are priced at $25, $30 and $35. In fabric quality, in model and make, these clothes are guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction. They have been named, appropriately enough, the "clothes of refinement."

When you are looking for rugs, you want dependable quality in both materials and colors. You also want the lowest price commensurate with this reliability. The Torrey, Bright & Capen Co., 348-350 Washington street, has a carefully selected stock, reinforced by the most commodious showrooms. This firm desires to gain and retain your confidence in its ability to meet requirements both of price and quality.

Boys' Easter clothes in great variety can be seen at Browning, King & Co., 407 to 411 Washington street. The boys' and children's department is replenished at present with new spring suits, hats and furnishings for the young people. Mothers will find that the display of this firm is stylish, well made and, quality considered, inexpensive.

GIRL'S RUSSIAN COSTUME.

Russian coats made with waist and skirt portions in one, and belted at the waist line are smart and exceedingly becoming to the schoolgirl. This costume shows one of the mixed suitings makes the costume illustrated with a trimming of white and of narrow braid but the model will be found charming for pongee, foulard, linen and cotton fabrics as well as for those of wool.

The quantity of material required for the 12-year size 8 to 14 years is 6½ yards 24 or 27, 4 yards 32 or 3½ yards 44 inches wide with 9 yards of wide, 10 yards of narrow braid.

The pattern may be had in sizes for girls from 8 to 14 years of age and can be had at any May Manton agency or will be mailed to any address on receipt of price (10c) by May Manton Pattern Co., 132 East 23d street, New York; or Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ing the new vamps, insteps, toes and heels, is now in progress at James McCreery & Co., Twenty-third and Thirty-fourth streets, New York city. There is also a sale of men's haberdashery, including knitted four-in-hand scarfs made of pure thread silk. In the boys' departments there are refiners, suits of plain and fancy fabric, Norfolk and double-breasted suits, boys' first long-trouser suits, and also suits especially designed for young men, at moderate prices. Hats, caps and furnishings.

Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder has been prepared by experts, under the direction of an expert, ever since 1866. And ever since that time it has been recognized as one of the leading dentifrices. It cleanses and beautifies the teeth and imparts a pure fragrance to the breath.

The thousands of people who attended the millinery opening of the Houghton & Dutton Co. last week saw some of the handsomest hats in Boston. Such was the general verdict. This firm receives regular shipments from its Paris agent, embracing all that is new. The foreign models are cleverly reproduced by its own corps of experienced artists, who also bring out thousands of their own ideas. Hundreds of hats are turned out daily, and no two are alike.

Lowney's, 416 Washington street, near Summer, has a full line of appropriate gifts and decorations for Easter. The dullest of little chickens, ducks and geese, as well as eggs, rabbits, Easter mottoes, boxes and baskets full of delicious bonbons all fully decorated, are included. While looking at them you can refresh yourself with one of the well-known chocolate fountain drinks and see how good they are.

Men of refined dress instinct will be pleased to learn that they may now secure the celebrated Hart, Schaffner & Marx clothes at the Continental Clothing House at Washington and Boylston streets.

There is a peculiar something to the garments made by Hart, Schaffner & Marx that stamps them as out-of-the-ordinary. They carry an air of distinction and a tone that is at once recognized by men careful of their attire. The new spring patterns and styles are truly handsome and worth going a long distance to see, if for no other reason than to put yourself on what is correct in attire for men for the coming season. You will find the prices on these garments exceedingly low for such splendid quality, as the suits range in price from $20 to $40.

SIR ERNEST SHACKLETON DUE TO REACH NEW YORK FRIDAY

SIR ERNEST H. SHACKLETON.

LADY SHACKLETON.

LIVERPOOL—Sir Ernest Shackleton, the famous explorer, sailed today for the United States aboard the Lusitania. Sir Ernest refused to comment further today on his announcement of last night that he will again lead an Antarctic expedition, which will be privately financed and conducted wholly independent of the "British expedition," which Captain Scott will lead. He will start for the far south next year.

NEW YORK—Arrangements have just been completed for the reception of Sir Ernest H. Shackleton, V. C. O. (Order Victorian Cross), the distinguished British Antarctic explorer, and Lady Shackleton, when they arrive next Friday, March 25, on the Lusitania.

They will go to Washington, where they will be the guests of Ambassador and Mrs. Bryce. The British ambassador will the next afternoon introduce Sir Ernest to President Taft, and that same evening the President will present the explorer the gold medal of the National Geographic Society in Convention hall. Returning to New York, Sir Ernest and Lady Shackleton will spend Sunday quietly, meeting a few friends. Monday evening the American Geographical Society of New York, of which Archie M. Huntington is president, will present Sir Ernest with its gold medal at a meeting to be held in the hall of the Engineers' building. The following evening, Tuesday, March 29, he will give his first popular lecture in America in Carnegie Hall. He will be introduced by Commander Robert Peary.

OTTAWA, Ont.—Lieut. Sir Ernest H. Shackleton, the famous explorer, will be in Ottawa next month as the guest of Earl Grey. He is to be in New York first and will give three lectures in Canada, the first in Ottawa, under the patronage of the Governor General, the evening of April 13. The other two lectures will be given in Montreal and Toronto.

Miss Eleanor Shackleton, sister of the British explorer, will be in New York to welcome her brother when he arrives. She has not seen him since he started on his memorable expedition.

PARIS WEEKLY FASHION LETTER

By Mme. Murielle Loeb

(Copyright, 1910, by Mme. Murielle Loeb.)

PARIS—The novelty of the new wash goods lies in the fact that they look exactly like wool goods; the imitation is quite perfect, although in weight the new wash goods are lighter than ever. The designs in stripes, checks, blocks, plaids, etc., and the manner of weave are all in imitation of the wool goods.

Original wash suits are being shown just now in Paris. These come in striped linens and the trimming consists of plain linen in the color of the stripe. The skirts are made very slightly gathered at the waist line, the upper part is the striped goods, while the hem (which reaches as high as the knee) is of plain goods. The coats are very short, made tight fitting to the waist line and having a rather long peplum, which is also of the plain linen; a sailor collar and brass button form the finish to these new wash suits. These new suits are very "dashing" in effect, and the shape of the jacket strongly reminds one of the bolero, only of course finished with a peplum.

Wash goods in the biggest one-toned plaid effect, will be very popular this spring, indeed there is no end to the variety of these being shown in Paris this season. Low necked effects with "berthas" and Toby frill collars are be-

To the rural residents of the section the question is as to which is the best Republican to fill out the unexpired term of the late Congressman Lovering, and merely to hold over until the Republicans of the district can get another start and send Judge Robert O. Harris to the next session of Congress.

That Judge Harris will be the next nominee of the Republican party seems as much assured in the fourteenth district today as the fact that a special election is to be held on Tuesday, and his failure to secure the nomination and his defeat, asserted to have been unfairly accomplished, will shine out as the leading argument for him next fall.

The declaration of the Republican nominee, Mr. Buchanan, to squarely and fairly meet the question as to whether or not he would support Joseph G. Cannon for speaker of the House at a Republican caucus, if elected, has done much to stamp anti-Cannonism and independence of the party lash as leading issues in this campaign.

Republican tenets of many years standing are being turned upon by exactly the people that the Massachusetts Republican organization felt were their staunchest supporters, and the Republicans of the Cape Cod district are declaring themselves ready to commence to do a little thinking for themselves.

The name of ex-Gov. John L. Bates came into the campaign as an issue because of the attitude of Mr. Buchanan at the time of the election of William L. Douglas as Governor of Massachusetts. At that time Mr. Buchanan contributed $5000 to the Democratic campaign fund because of his close personal and business relations with Mr. Douglas, and was later made the private secretary of the Governor, and the Cape district Republicans have always charged that Mr. Buchanan's $5000 and his aid were in a measure responsible for the defeat of Mr. Bates, who is extremely popular in the district.

On the real political campaign issues it is claimed that Mr. Buchanan has constantly refused to come out fair and square, and that although declaring himself at the outset as opposed to Cannonism and making this one of the issues of his campaign, he maintains now a non-committal attitude.

Asked within a day or two as to his position in a Republican caucus if elected to Congress from the district, and whether or not he would support Joseph G. Cannon, he replied: "Young man, if any one asks you about that, you tell them you do not know."

With this declaration Mr. Buchanan hurried to the train which was to take him into the Cape Cod section, where he hopes to be supported in such numbers that any Democratic gains in the cities will be of no avail.

Perhaps one of the most enthusiastic Republicans who is out and out for Eugene N. Foss is James Sidney Allen of Brockton, who has always been a Republican and who now declares that he can be just as good a Republican and yet vote for Mr. Foss.

Mr. Allen asserts that Mr. Foss is a better Republican than Mr. Buchanan. "Mr. Foss was rocked in a Republican cradle," said Mr. Allen, "and for many years he has been devoted to the party's best interests, but there have been people in the party who could not see quite as far ahead as Mr. Foss could."

"I am for Mr. Foss," added ex-Senator Allen, "because I know that Mr. Foss better represents the party than Mr. Buchanan possibly could. He is a man who has been urging Canadian reciprocity for a great many years, having the courage of his convictions, and because he had this courage he has been read out of the Republican party."

"I want it distinctly understood," said Mr. Allen, "that I have no disaffection with the Republican party but that I am with Mr. Foss on account of the principle involved in this contest."

"Never since 1852 have I voted anything but a Republican ballot, but next Tuesday I shall cast my vote for Mr. Foss, and by so doing I believe I can be a better Republican than those who mark their ballot for William R. Buchanan."

"I would have liked to cast my vote for a thoroughly representative Republican in this district, but we were prevented from doing this by the action of the Republican city committee of Brockton, who failed to live up to their promises of a conference to pick a Republican who would meet the demands of all."

"By coming out in the open in favor of Mr. Foss I am not committing myself to Democracy by any means. I am standing for a principle, and I am simply saying that I think Eugene N. Foss has a fighting chance."

Friends of Judge Robert O. Harris of Bridgewater are very bitter over the Republican deal, as they term it, and they will probably do more toward cutting down the Republican majority than any other voters in the district.

To hundreds of old-line Republicans Judge Harris stands for all that is honest and right in the district, and they believe that to elect him as the successor of the late Congressman Lovering would be a fitting tribute to the cause of true Republicanism.

Because of the alleged unfair methods used by the delegates who made Mr. Buchanan the Republican nominee, these personal followers of Judge Harris have been forced into the open and they are declaring in favor of Mr. Foss and even campaigning for him.

To a great many Republicans the issues which shall be decided next Tuesday by the special election are not Cannonism and the predominance of the Re-

Roosevelts Today on Egyptian Nile

Ex-President and His Party 'Are Now in the Land of the Pharaohs.

GENERAL VIEW OF TOWN AND DAM AT ASSUAN.

Assuan is situated at the first cataract of the Nile and the great barrage there controls the whole water supply of Egypt and renders the land fertile.

KOROSKO, Upper Egypt—Theodore Roosevelt is now in the land of the Pharaohs, his special steamer, the Ibis, having reached this place today. Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, with their children and a few correspondents, boarded the steamer Friday night at Haifa, the other correspondents and members of the party traveling by the government steamer Britain.

The party will not reach Assuan until Sunday morning, the decision to travel down the Nile by boat having delayed the arrival by more than a day.

Colonel Roosevelt has been spending his time at work and in reading an account of the British campaigns in the Sudan, which he has been discussing interestedly with Captain Midwinter, who is in charge of the party for the British government and participated in the campaign.

Sir William Garstin, the Egyptian irrigation authority, is also traveling with him and has been discussing the works in this country and the irrigation problems of America with the ex-President. He intends to visit the United States shortly and study the conservation movement.

At Wadi-Halfa Governor Bassett of the province of Bimbashi with a party of women greeted the Roosevelts.

The expedition will continue down the river until it reaches Shellal, where launches will be taken so as the better to inspect the great Assuan dam on Sunday.

Most of the trip from Khartum to Abu Hamed was made in the night, but the early hours afforded a sight of a considerable stretch of the country. Colonel Roosevelt expressed himself as astonished at the luxury of railway traveling through a desert. The special train arrived at Wadi Haifa, 575 miles from Khartum, late Friday night.

The former President arrives in Rome on April 3, in Paris April 21, in Berlin May 8 and in London the 16th. In several instances Colonel Roosevelt will arrive at one city on the same day that he leaves another, but, counting each portion of the day as a whole day, he will spend a week in Paris, a week in Berlin, four days in Rome, three days each at Genoa, Vienna and Budapest; two days at Brussels, the Hague and Christiania and a day at Rotterdam, Hamburg, Copenhagen and Stockholm.

"The Duties of the Citizens of a Republic" will be the subject of three lectures that Colonel Roosevelt is to deliver at the University of Sorbonne at Paris. President Fallieres will preside at these lectures, which will be given in English and before only students and faculty members.

At the conclusion of the lectures the university will give a dinner to the ex-President, followed by a public reception in the grand salon of the university. On the afternoon of April 23 he will be received by the Academie.

Opposing Candidates for Congress

Contestants in the Impending Special Election in the Fourteenth Massachusetts District.

EUGENE NOBLE FOSS.

WILLIAM R. BUCHANAN.

publican party in national affairs, but Buchananism and a repudiation of the defeat of John L. Bates five years ago, as well as the defeat of Judge Robert O. Harris in the Republican caucuses two weeks ago.

One of the ardent supporters of Judge Harris who is out and out for Eugene N. Foss in this campaign is Henry O. Little of Bridgewater, a man of considerable influence and one who has always stuck close to the Republican banner.

Mr. Little declares unqualifiedly that the friends of Judge Harris are to elect Eugene N. Foss to Congress for the unexpired term of the late Congressman Lovering and that next fall they will nominate Judge Harris, who like his father before him, is idolized by the best element of his district.

"Mr. Foss," said Mr. Little, "is the one man for us to send to Congress at this time, because he represents the business interests of New England, and this is an industrial section and we need a man like him. It will be a very great pleasure to help elect Mr. Foss this year and to nominate and elect Judge Robert O. Harris next fall."

Expressions similar to that of Mr. Little are being made throughout the district, and lifelong Republicans who boast that they have never voted anything but the Republican ticket are now prepared to bolt, repudiate Republicanism as forced upon them and defy the crack of the party whip.

One of similar type to Mr. Little is Alexander Dove of Bridgewater, who is proud of the fact that he cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln on the battle-field of Chattanooga and has never voted any other than the Republican ticket.

On Tuesday Mr. Dove will cast a ballot, he says, for Eugene N. Foss, and according to his declarations he will use his influence to secure other Republican ballots.

Unusual apathy is noted in Republican ranks in the Cape district, and chairmen of town committees freely admit that, should Mr. Foss win in the election of next Tuesday, it will be the stay-at-homes who make such an election possible.

Judge Frederick Hall of Taunton, chairman of the Republican district committee, freely acknowledges that he and his committee know little or nothing about the situation and that the brunt of the campaign is being left to the city and town committees.

For the first time in a great many years the Republican state committee, however, is taking a very great interest in the campaign, and has already furnished abundant funds to town and city committees, Taunton's committee acknowledging the receipt of $1500 last week as the first instalment from the state committee.

Silas Reed, formerly chairman of the Republican city committee of Taunton, is one of the disaffected leaders, although as a party man Mr. Reed is still in line and personally will vote for Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Reed resigned as chairman of the city committee last week because he was a Harris man and would not actively campaign in support of Mr. Buchanan. He declares he has no intention of bolting the party, but he believes that unless the "steam roller" methods of the Republican party in Massachusetts are halted a very general bolt of the party will result.

Buchanan men throughout the district are hopeful and cannot see how they can lose in such a strongly Republican section, but the Foss supporters declare that their candidate has a fighting chance and they hope to win out.

In order to achieve this result a majority of 14,000 votes must be overcome. This majority, it is claimed, will be cut one half by the Republican stay-at-homes, and Foss supporters are claiming more than 25 per cent of the remainder of the Republican votes, which it is figured will be enough to swing the election with the Democratic vote which Mr. Foss is bound to get.

Big rallies will be held this noon and this evening at Plymouth, and the wind-up of the campaign will come Monday night at Attleboro on the Foss end and at Brockton on the Buchanan end.

Both sides are making great plans for Monday evening in Brockton and Taunton. Rallies will be held in every ward of each city this evening and Monday evening, with a large array of local speakers, who expect to be assisted by Mayor John F. Fitzgerald and Congressman Joseph O'Connell of Boston on the Foss end, while Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and other Republicans of prominence will speak for Mr. Buchanan.

Conservative estimates include the city of Taunton and the large manufacturing towns of Plymouth, Abington, Rockland and Whitman for Mr. Foss, with a big vote on the South Shore, where Mr. Foss has his summer home, besides large inroads into the usual Republican vote of the Cape Cod district.

In Brockton Edward Gilmore, the Foss campaign manager, is claiming four out of the seven wards of Mr. Buchanan's home city, and close contests in the other three wards. He also feels quite sure of carrying Bridgewater, Wareham, Lakeville and Middleboro and practically all of the South Shore.

Mr. Buchanan has been particularly persistent in his work with city and town Republican organizations, and will rely to a very great extent on the work of these bodies to send him to Washington.

BROCKTON, Mass.—Brockton is to be the center of interest at the close of the congressional campaign in the fourteenth district, as it was the scene of the convention which resulted in the choice of William R. Buchanan of this city as the Republican candidate and the launching of the strenuous movement. All the available local halls have been engaged for campaign purposes to-night and Monday night. A whirlwind automobile tour of the city will be undertaken by the Foss supporters tonight.

with rallies in all the wards, speakers going from one to another.

The biggest rally of them all will be in the interest of Mr. Buchanan tonight in City theater and Massasoit hall. The latter will be an overflow rally. Three bands have been engaged, one to start at Campello, another at Montello and the third at the East Side. They will march toward the City theater, leading the way for those expected to attend the rally. There will be a consolidation of the 70 musicians in front of the theater and a concert will be given with cheering and red fire. The speakers at the rally will include Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Governor Draper, Lieutenant-Governor Frothingham and others.

Both parties have made arrangements for automobiles galore next Tuesday and strong efforts will be made to poll all possible strength.

With Merchandise Stocks Aggregating in Value Three Times Those of Any Other Boston Retail Establishment—Yet Supplemented and Made Ever-Changing Day by Day as Steamer and Train Contribute Fresh Invoices

This Store Is in Readiness for a Busy Pre-Easter Week

Much of this vast assemblage of spring merchandise is from abroad—selected personally by our own buyers, 30 of whom make yearly trips across the ocean. But much also is of home production—goods in whose production America stands pre-eminent. But, whether of foreign or domestic make, everything is of the high quality requisite for admission to these vast stocks

But in addition to the advantage of selecting from such superb stocks there is a decided advantage for our patrons in the store betterments and rearrangement of selling sections. Broader aisles and roomier spaces have been obtained on every floor—and many changes have been made all over the store to make shopping here most convenient and pleasurable.

Particularly inviting just now are the apparel sections with their displays of

New Suits	New Coats	New Skirts	New Lace and Embroidered Robes
New Waists	New Footwear	New Gloves
New Hosiery	New Veilings	New Neckwear	New Corsets
New Undermuslins	New Silk Petticoats	New Belts

and the many other needfuls for the Easter Outfit

Hardly Less Interesting are the Extensive and Varied Assortments of Dress Materials and Accessories Including:

New Silks	New Dress Goods	New Wash Goods
New Laces	New Trimmings and Braids
New White Goods and Embroideries	New Ribbons

Among the recent changes in the store which we believe will be welcomed by all and which you should not miss seeing are: THE NEW SHOE SECTION ON THE THIRD FLOOR, the finest appointed in the city; THE NEWLY ENLARGED MILLINERY PARLORS, probably the largest and busiest anywhere; the rearranged and beautiful SECOND FLOOR SECTIONS FOR WOMEN'S AND MISSES' APPAREL; the necessary additional space on the street floor given over to GLOVES, NECKWEAR, LACES and RIBBONS—making these sections the largest in Boston in area—as they have been so long in volume of business.

ANNUAL "KLATSCH" OF GAMMA DELTA

The annual "Klatsch" of the Gamma Delta Society of Boston University was held Friday night at the college of liberal arts with a gathering of about 1500. There were large delegations from Harvard, Technology, Tufts, Dartmouth, Brown, Wellesley, Radcliffe, Smith and the New England Conservatory of Music.

In Jacob Sleeper hall a brief program was rendered. This included tenor solos by Leon Baldwin, B. U., '07, a graduate of Boston University, and recitations by Mrs. Agnes Knox Black, now professor of elocution at the college of liberal arts and wife of Prof. E. Charlton Black, head of the department of English. At 9:15 p. m. a general inspection of the building was made.

SPECIAL CENSUS AGENT NAMED.
TAUNTON, Mass.—Simeon A. Wheeler has been appointed special census agent on manufactures for the city of Taunton and towns of Raynham, Easton, Mansfield, Norton, Dighton, Attleboro and North Attleboro.

ARTISANS today are putting finishing touches to the work of renovating and changing the interior of the attractive quarters of the Boston Art Club at Newbury and Dartmouth streets.

The club will open its enlarged and improved clubhouse with a reception to the members and invited guests on Wednesday evening, March 30. The new gallery which is now on the third floor will be hung with paintings by the artist members.

No new property has been acquired, as was contemplated at one time, but the whole clubhouse above the ground floor has assumed a new aspect of arrangement, which provides increased facilities and advantages for the larger scope along social lines which the club has decided upon. Ladies, the wives of members or their guests, are now to be a more potent factor in the club's life. Where heretofore they have been privileged merely to attend the exhibitions and lectures given from time to time they will now have the use of dining rooms, parlors, writing rooms and library in the building. The women will be virtually club members. They may dine singly or with their friends, they may give dinner parties, they may even enjoy the use of the galleries for their own exhibitions, so long as they save the club from unusual expense.

The Art Club never had a restaurant. At the Saturday night gatherings suppers have been served, but facilities for purchasing a meal at the clubhouse whenever desired have not been available. Now the second floor is fitted up for dining purposes, with one room meant more especially for the women. Finely equipped kitchens have been installed and a competent chef and other help will be retained to cater to the most fastidious tastes. There will be separate reception rooms for the women.

The art gallery, containing about $50,000 worth of pictures, which was on the second floor, has been moved to the third floor. The clubhouse is four stories, with one portion in the rear which runs up five stories. These floors have been made into sleeping quarters. Redecoration and new plumbing have been included in the improvements.

The added freedom which the ladies will now enjoy at this club introduces a new feature in club life in the city; only one or two clubs have attempted anything of so broad a nature and it is expected that increased membership will result. The club has between 400 and 500 members at present, with a constitutional limit of 800.

The membership, while it includes many artists, is not made up entirely of such, or those directly connected with art, in fact, the majority of members are laymen.

VICE-PRES. HENRY HORNBLOWER.

SECRETARY GEORGE H. WORTHLEY.

Art Club has been in existence for more than a generation. It was founded primarily for the encouragement of art and sculpture and its high ideals have been closely adhered to during all these years. The club holds two exhibitions during the early part of each year, one for works in oil in January and one of water colors and pastels in April. To encourage exhibitors and to stimulate their efforts the club appropriates substantial sums of money with which to purchase meritorious specimens. From four to half a dozen pictures, the work of members, are purchased each year.

Prominent local artists among its members are: J. J. Enneking, Charles A. Aiken, Darius Cobb, Walter L. Dean, Sears Gallagher, F. H. Tompkins, Scott C. Carbee, Daniel J. Strain, Hendricks H. Hallett, C. Scott White, Melbourne H. Hardwick, Marshall Johnson, Walter Gilman Page and F. H. Richardson.

The officers of the club are: President, Harvey N. Shepard; vice-presidents, Henry Hornblower and Hendricks A. Hallett; treasurer, Harry M. Aldrich; secretary, George H. Worthley.

SIR SAMUEL FERGUSON

By One Who Knew Him.

LONDON—Belfast is keeping the centenary of Sir Samuel Ferguson. "Strong son of Fergus," as Alfred Graves called him in a brilliant sonnet in The Spectator, which continues:

"Pure lips, pure hands, pure heart were thine, as eye
Erin demanded from her bards of old,
And therefore on thy harp-strings of pure gold
Has waked once more her high heroic lay."

What shoulders now shall match the mighty fold
Of Ossian's mantle?"

That sonnet, declared Ferguson's life-long friend, Sir Frederic Burton, to whom the author sent it, "tells in a few words the story of a beautiful life; for the subject of it was a man, in every high sense of the term." Ferguson was, indeed, something far more than a poet, even though he was the greatest poet Ireland ever gave birth to. He was a brilliant humorist, in the true and often forgotten sense of the word; he was an able barrister, whose work in the Four Courts had won for him the right to take silk; he was a patriotic politician, who never gave up to party what was meant for mankind; and he was a distinguished scholar, who among many other gifts numbered the ability to decipher the Ogham inscriptions.

Born in Ireland, Ferguson was the son of one of those many spendthrift Irish gentlemen who commonly left their children nothing but their native genius and a pedigree finishing somewhere among the kings. Even while reading for the bar the future poet was reduced to supporting himself by literary work. The result was that, in his twenty-first year, he sent to Blackwoods, then at the height of its reputation, "The Forging of the Anchor," a poem which in the words of his friend, John Greenleaf Whittier, has gained a world-wide fame. Professor Wilson, the famous Christopher North of the "Noctes Ambrosianae," was then editor of the magazine, and on one of the memorable supper parties at Ambrose's well known tavern, read it to the select coterie.

"But is the poem your own, Kit?" Ticker asked when he finished. "I wish it were," North replied, "but the world will yet hear of the writer. Belfast gave him birth, and he bears the same name with a true poet of your own Scotland. 'Maga' will be proud of introducing him to the world."

Many contributions from Sir Samuel's pen appeared in Blackwoods after that. The most famous of all these, however, was that rollicking piece of Irish humor, "Father Tom and the Pope." This "outrageous extravaganza," as its author termed it, was published anonymously and attracted such universal attention that it was in turn ascribed to Lord Brougham, the Duke of Wellington and Maginn.

Long after the secret had leaked out in Dublin, it was still attributed to Maginn in America, on the grounds that he was the only writer with sufficient wit to have composed it.

The skit originated in a debate between a certain Fr. Tom Maguire and a Protestant clergyman called Pope, to which Ferguson was unwittingly carried by Mrs. FitzSimon, a daughter of O'Connell, in her zeal for his conversion. When she realized the effect her efforts had produced, the lady gave up the attempt, though she remained a devoted friend of the poet's to the last, and years later wrote a delightful imitation of a well-known ballad, which began as follows:

"Sam Ferguson, my friend Sam, when you I first did know,

My locks were like the berry brown, that now are like the snow;

I was not very old then, you some years younger still;

Both climbing up the sunny side of life's steep toilsome hill."

No one enjoyed "Father Tom" more than Sir William Hamilton, the astronomer. "Did you ever read 'Father Tom and the Pope' or a Night at the Vatican?" he wrote to a distinguished fellow mathematician, Professor de Morgan. "If so, you cannot have enjoyed it as much as I, who am an Irishman. What I invite you to do is, to tell me which was the Protestant and which the Papist. If you had ever spent, as I once did, a night—the richest night of my life—with Father Tom, you could decide at once."

Protestant, Ulsterman and Unionist as he was, Ferguson had his joke with both sides. In "The Loyal Orangeman" he exposed with gentle humor the bigotry of that renowned organization. The ballad soon won an even greater popularity than "Father Tom," and when the mighty leaders of the North East Circuit gathered, in the evening, round the dinner table of the mess, no call of the "Father" ever produced more prolonged applause than that for "The Loyal Orangeman of Portadown," from Mr. Ferguson. As a politician he was without prejudice. A friend of Davis, of Gavan Duffy, and of M'Gee, he knew and appreciated much that these men were endeavoring to accomplish, without approving of their methods.

When the crash came in '48, and the writers of the Nation were indicted by the government, he gave up his wedding tour, and returned to Dublin to defend Richard Williams. His speech on that occasion was a model of restrained eloquence, and of all the men tried that summer Williams was the only one acquitted.

After his marriage he settled down in Dublin, in one of those spacious and comfortable Georgian houses which the world has ceased to build. "The Ferguson Arms," as it came to be called, was soon one of the most popular centers of Dublin society. Ferguson's sympathies were catholic in the best sense of the word, and it would be impossible to name even a tithe of the famous men and women who came within his hospitable walls.

There was no ostentation. "Plain living and high thinking" was the rule, and the visitor to North George street sat, as it were, ever above the salt. There would be no tinge of exaggeration in saying that a happier marriage never took place. The tastes of both "Sir Sam" and Lady Ferguson were identical, and predominant among them was the wish to make those about them happy. Neither seemed ever to grow old, and the house had always its complement of young people as well as great artists, explorers, and literati, for besides their own immediate nephews and nieces, the Fergusons had a glorious army of nephews and nieces by adoption. Perhaps, indeed, "Uncle Sam" was never happier than when sitting in his armchair, before the great fireplace, advising and encouraging those who were beginning to become articulate with their pens.

It is, of course, as a poet that Sir Samuel will be known to posterity. His poetry is of the kind that lives, being conceived on great lines rather than in accordance with the fashion of an hour. Much that he wrote will be always popular. Such poems, indeed, as "The Forging of the Anchor," "The Fairy Thorn," "The Welshmen of Tirawley," and "The Hymn of the Fishermen" will probably always find a place in the anthologies of the future. One ballad in particular, "The Sinking of the Monitor," is known even better perhaps in America than in England.

Alfred M. Williams, who later wrote the introduction to the American edition of his works, was the first to welcome it. I have republished, he wrote to Ferguson, "the poem on the loss of the Monitor, and it has been already extensively copied. It is especially grateful to us, as European poets so seldom find any themes in our history or experience worthy of notice, and when one does in such a manner as that, we feel doubly grateful." On the other hand it takes a poet to appreciate the epic side of Ferguson's work. Such things are not "understanded of the general," and here his audience was a more discriminating one. Whittier wrote to him an encouraging letter from Amesbury, Mass., on the publication of "The Lays of Western Gael," but every reader was not a Whittier.

"My dear friend," he said, "I ought long ago to have acknowledged the receipt of thy 'Lays of Western Gael,' and the sonnet so complimentary to myself, forwarded to me by the kindness of Miss Smith of Philadelphia; but I did not know thy address, and waited to ascertain it. I have read thy poems with real delight; some of them were before familiar to me. I have always admired the vigor and rude power and pathos of 'The Welshmen of Tirawley.' 'The Forging of the Anchor' is world-wide. 'The Burial of King Cormac' and 'The Fairy Thorn' are great favorites of mine; and I am very glad of the opportunity to thank the author for them. And I like exceedingly the translations from the old Irish bards. The 'Lament for the Sons of Usnach' is full of a wild pathos, and is most admirably rendered in ringing verse, like the wail of a Lyke-wake. No volume of transatlantic poetry has been more welcome to me than thine. Excuse the brevity of this note and its wretched penmanship. With thanks and hearty congratulations I am thy friend, John G. Whittier."

It is probably beyond question that Ferguson's choice of subjects militated somewhat against the success of his later work. That later work was his greatest work, but the early history of Ireland had too archeological a taste for modern palates. Fortunately he was placed beyond the necessity of consulting the taste of the moment, and so continued to give the world the work he was most fitted to. He could not do otherwise. His duty to God and his duty to man he set before all else, and it found expression in the sincerity of his poetry as in all other things he did. He stood, in his conception of life, "as ever in his great task-master's hand," just as he pictured the fishermen in one of the most beautiful of his poems:

"Who, when through drift and darkness
The reeling hooker flies,
And rocks, in ridgy starkness,
Athwart our bows arise,
Prompt to the helm's commanding,
Brings round the swerving tree,
Till, into harbor standing,
We anchor safe and free."

"And, great and small sufficing,
Before that equal law,
That rules the sun's uprising,
And makes the mainail draw,
Brings round his erring creatures
To seek salvation's ways,
By laws surpassing nature's—
To God give foremost praise."

AMERICAN CONSULS SEND NEW ENGLAND SHOE TRADE ADVICE

Many letters are being received by the New England Shoe and Leather Association from American consuls in various foreign countries, in response to a circular of inquiry. These responses contain valuable information for exporters.

Consul W. Bardel at Rheims, France, says that no foreign country can offer a more promising field for the introduction of New England products of leather and its accessories than this part of France.

Albert Halstead, consul at Birmingham, England, states that there should be an admirable opportunity for the sale of shoe and leather goods in England, although it should be appreciated that large quantities of harness and saddlery and leather and fancy goods are shipped to the United States.

From Swansea, Wales, Consul Jesse H. Johnson writes that, owing to their superior finish and elegance of shape, American shoes are in favor, but in the past, the prices for good reliable shoes, suitable for wear in the country's damp climate, have been prohibitive. He further states that his experience in this district clearly indicates that there is an excellent market for such goods, if care be taken to introduce reliable footwear at reasonable figures.

Consul Harry P. Dill at Orillia, Ont., proposes that a few manufacturers, or dealers, be selected to make an attempt to secure a share of the boot and shoe trade of Canada, the association to stand back of any loss in the experiment. He says to send the best samples and the best salesmen; show dealers the exact cost of the goods delivered, duty paid, and await results.

NEW STEAMER'S TRIAL TRIP TODAY

The new steamer Herman Frasch, which is undergoing her trial trip today, put out from Quincy at 8 o'clock this morning and is expected to return about the middle of the afternoon. Some time was devoted to adjusting her compasses, so it will probably be about 2 o'clock when her trial trip is completed.

The Herman Frasch has been built for the sulphur trade and is to be taken south to Baltimore, which is to be her home port. She was built at the Fore River shipyard for the Union Sulphur Company. Her builders' contract calls for a speed of 11 knots light and 10 knots loaded.

CHANGE OF ARMY COMMANDS MADE

Major-General Wood to Succeed Major-General Bell as Chief of Staff—Other Orders Issued.

WASHINGTON—Secretary of War Dickinson issued orders today to cover the following changes in command:

Maj.-Gen. Leonard Wood as chief of staff to succeed Major-General Bell on April 22; Maj.-Gen. Frederick Dent Grant, to command the department of the East; Major-General Hodges to command the department of the lakes; General Smith to command the department of Missouri; General Howe to command the department of Dakota; General Hoyt, when appointed and confirmed to brigadier-general, to Ft. D. A. Russell, Wyo.

The changes in departmental commands will take place about April 20. General Barry, who commanded the army of Cuban pacification, will relieve General Scott as superintendent of the military academy about Aug. 31. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, now assistant chief of staff, at his own request, will relieve General Barry in command of the department of California, about Aug. 25.

FOLK-DANCES AT ROCHESTER.

Happenings in New York

Ramblings of a Stub Pen

New York Daily Letter.

NEW YORK—"Wake up, local officials and lawmakers, and learn your own city." This is the cry of the borough of Queens, and it has aroused the attention of President Greaser of the borough, in conjunction with the Long Island City Business Mens Association, has arranged to have Mayor Gaynor and the members of the board of estimate visit Queens and look over its resources and possibilities.

The borough of Queens has an area of 117 miles, but a population of only 250,000 people. The people of the borough realize that with the extension of rapid transit facilities and the consequent growth of population public improvements will be necessitated. The borough has 912 miles of streets, but less than half the road surface has been improved. Of that only 327 miles are macadam.

Now, as the majority of Manhattanites are perfect strangers in Queens, the business men of the borough saw that to get intelligent action from the board of estimate and the mayor they must show them the country. This they have arranged to do early next month, and are preparing to make a gala day of the occasion.

The city printers, it is learned, buy their stamps for the office of the commissioner of jurors because the postoffice will not give the city credit.

City Doesn't Get Stamp Credit—This was revealed in a recent letter to the board of estimate asking for the transfer of an appropriation of $509.16 to pay the chief city printer. The letters say:

"We cannot buy stamps on credit from the postoffice, so—company buy them and pay for them at the end of the month. It does not seem reasonable to compel them to sue for claims which are legally due beyond question and as their supplying stamps is a favor to us it seems very ungracious that their bill should not be promptly paid."

The public service commissions of New York and Massachusetts, which exercise large powers of regulation with regard to his railroads, recently received warm praise from the lips of President W. C. Brown of the New York Central lines. He said:

"The relations of the road with its patrons and the communities served by it have been harmonious and pleasant. This Massachusetts Railroad Board Praised condition has been fostered and encouraged by the efforts of the public service commission in New York state and the Massachusetts board of railroad commissioners in comparing and adjusting differences which, handled with less wisdom and moderation, might have resulted in serious friction and controversy. The influence and the cooperation of these commissions have been uniformly beneficial to the road, and have done much to improve the service for the public."

Now that the notorious Allds case is nearing its close there is considerable interest in the prospects for state legislation during the few remaining weeks of the legislative session. The following may be given as the tentative program: The Meade-Phillips bill, amending the primary laws of the state which provides for an official ballot, a uniform caucus day, for personal enrolment, for the selection of delegates to all conventions by the electors and for stricter regulation of conventions, will be adopted. The Hinman-Green bill, covering much the same ground and considered by the Hughes progressives the most desirable, will be defeated.

The Ward ballot bill providing for the arrangement of candidates under the head of the office so that duplication of names is avoided, but with the party circle retained, will be adopted. The Ward bill is not the same as the Massachusetts ballot advocated by Governor Hughes. It is an improvement on the present cumbersome ballots of this state, but it lacks the elimination of party designations which characterize the Massachusetts ballot.

The Duns short ballot proposition, endorsed by Governor Hughes, has some slight chance of adoption.

The telephone and telegraph amendments to the public service commission act will be passed.

Legislation necessary to the acceptance of the Harriman park gift will be passed. The water storage proposition backed by the water supply commission and Governor Hughes is doubtful of success. A constitutional amendment is necessary to accomplish the change proposed.

GRANT TO FRANCE MINIMUM TARIFF

WASHINGTON—The text of the proclamation granting the minimum tariff to France and Algeria was sent to Albany today by special messenger to be signed by President Taft.

Under the arrangement made by France, 96 per cent of the total exports of the United States will come under the free list of minimum rates conceded on a number of articles by the French government. Approximately 80 classes of articles will be given the minimum rate by France.

Cotton, copper, crude sponges and Louisiana sulphur have been placed on the free list. The minimum rate has been extended to cottonseed oil, an exclusively American product and the tariff on competing edible oils has been raised to the same rate. American pork meat products will be admitted on the same basis as those from other countries.

NORMAN H. WHITE TO SPEAK. Representative Norman H. White of Brookline will speak at the Boston Young Mens Christian Union tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock on "Some Recent Legislation and Some Proposed Legislation in Massachusetts."

FIRE INSURANCE PROBE GOES ON

Inquiry of Superintendent Hotchkiss Resumed Today in New York Brings Out Much New Evidence.

NEW YORK—Further revelations of the methods used by fire insurance companies in dealing with legislative matters before the New York state Legislature were expected today when the inquiry being conducted by State Superintendent of Insurance Hotchkiss was resumed.

The inquiry, begun in an unexpected manner Friday, brought quick action from the start, and many declared the facts uncovered by the Armstrong committee would be exceeded by the present probe.

When the hearing was resumed today C. L. Case, former chairman of the laws committee of the New York board of underwriters, declared that certain firms of lawyers employed by the underwriters to do legislative work were permitted to charge lump sums, although other firms had to put in itemized bills. He insisted that he had destroyed most of his records so that he could not throw light on many expenditures.

Mr. Case stated that the company he represented paid $250 toward the $5000 contribution made to the Republican state committee in 1901. Asked if all of the foreign insurance companies contributed to a legislative fund, he said they did.

MRS. FAIRBANKS TALKS OF WOMEN

NEW YORK—All over the world, in all the countries which she has been visiting with her husband, the former Vice-President, particularly China, Japan and Korea, Mrs. Charles Warren Fairbanks found a "wonderful awakening among women."

"In China," said Mrs. Fairbanks, when seen in her suite at the Plaza, "it is evident that an important and radical change will take place very soon. I was particularly impressed by the Empress of Japan, by whom we were entertained. She was most gracious and charming. She was gowned in a Paris 'creation,' as were all the ladies of the court."

Mrs. Fairbanks said she had made no plans for the future.

MR. NEWELL GIVES BALLINGER STORY

WASHINGTON—The Ballinger-Pinchot investigation was resumed today with F. H. Newell, director of the reclamation service, on the stand.

Mr. Newell corroborated the testimony of A. P. Davis, chief engineer of the service as to the circumstances of the interviews the two men had with Secretary Ballinger, where the latter had announced his belief that the withdrawals made by his predecessor, Secretary Garfield, were illegal and should be restored. Mr. Newell said that he had protested against these restorations.

GREEK KING DECIDES IN THREE WEEKS IF HE WILL HOLD PLACE

ROME—Crown Prince Constantine is authority for the statement today that the next three weeks will decide whether his father, King George, is to retain the Hellenic throne.

Everything depends upon whether the Greek national Assembly succeeds in carrying out the Army League's orders and the league dissolves. The King does not intend to continue ruling under the direction of an irresponsible body like the league. On the other hand, the league does not intend to dissolve unless the Assembly does certain things which, the league's leaders think, will render the maintenance of their organization no longer necessary.

WINCHESTER PLANS VIGOROUS PROTEST ON GRADE CROSSING

A vigorous protest will probably be made by citizens of the town of Winchester next Monday at the adjourned town meeting against the acceptance of the plan for the abolishing of the grade crossing of the Boston & Maine railroad at the center. A special commission has been investigating for several years and Friday it made public a report.

The commission favors the closing of the present crossing in the center of the town and swinging travel over a bridge at the present station. The town has gone on record as favoring the abolition by raising the streets over the tracks at the present crossing.

RUSSIAN SINGER BUYS PEERLESS

American manufacturers have long been invading the European market with automobiles, but little headway has been made up to date in Russia. It was therefore with pleasure that Manager John L. Snow of the Peerless Motor Car Company of New England found that during the Boston automobile show he had interested Miss Lydia Lipkowska of the Boston Opera Company in one of the new Peerless town cars.

Miss Lipkowska believes that in the Peerless car she has found an ideal automobile for conditions that exist at St. Petersburg, and is contemplating taking one with her when she sails for Russia next month. This car which is of 20 horsepower has been designed and built with the intention of being mainly useful for city and suburban usage.

Considerable interest has been aroused by the addition of new four-company battalions, adding about 750 to the strength of the organization. These battalions are made up of first-year boys in their respective schools, who were formerly attending lectures and drilling without arms, under a separate drill master.

Since last fall these first-year boys have been given lectures in their respective school halls by Lieut. Charles A. Randlett. The subjects include military tactics, the battles of American wars, and setting-up exercises, corresponding somewhat to the Massachusetts militia service school, the history of the United States flag, the flags of other nations, the honors and courtesies to the flag, the difference between the rank of officers, and the courtesies pertaining to the same, the school of the soldier, the squad and the company.

These changes are the result of the plan for military instruction in high schools, put into operation last fall under direction of Dr. Thomas F. Harrington.

Col. George H. Benyon, instructor of military drill, took charge of the second, third and fourth year boys in the high schools, and Lieutenant Randlett was appointed assistant military instructor and placed over the first year boys.

Under the new regulations first year boys are privates only. During the second year only such boys who are proficient as shown by examinations are promoted to corporals. In the third year only such corporals who have shown that they would make good sergeants are advanced; in the fourth year only those sergeants who have been proficient during the third will receive commissions of lieutenants or captains.

In the fourth year, only such captains become majors, lieutenant-colonels, colonels and adjutants who by competitive company drill have won those titles.

THE MASSENET REVIVAL

"Griselidis" to Have a First Hearing in Boston—Outline of the "Juggler," "Thais" and Story of "The Patient Griselda" as the French Librettists See It.

FOUR Massenet operas in the first week of the Manhattan Opera Company's season at the Boston theater, March 28, is a phenomenon which musically progressive Boston may well contemplate in amazement. Massenet, whom singers of song programs have long thought of as pretty well exhausted and whom they only include as a sort of sweetmeat thrown in grudging concession to some childlike hearer, is now a vehicle for the seriousness of Miss Gauden's art and no doubt owes this revival to the simple fact that he interferes very little with the actress' histrionic absorption, requiring small attention from her or from the audience.

Moreover, these librettos have all a certain individuality and make possible a strongly marked character portrayal so that the music gains fictitious novelty as it were a thin veil thrown successively over figures of various outline and color, though in general Massenet's heroines are after one approved Parisian type. That Massenet's music is both thin and lacking the sincerity of Gounod, who is sugary almost to the same degree, criticism pretty generally consents. Sweet music was an ideal with Gounod, with Massenet one feels as if he might have done something better if he had had a deeper sense of life. But with Paris consuming his bonbons as fast as he could turn them out, no doubt he has been too busy. He is an earnest worker, it is said, but perhaps the spur of failure with his public more steadily applied would have wakened him to the deeper search for the inward things which his music seems so deftly to avoid. He is little venturesome, and keeps closely to the conventional harmonic structures, though his work has less of the formal melodic outline than Gounod, and in this reflects something of the freedom of the modern school; but it is only a weakening in rhythm without touching more sensitive depths, since his harmonic sense seems to cling to the commonplaces of the older school. Indeed, it is impossible to separate harmonic life and development from melody, truly seen; if Massenet handled his inner voice parts with a stronger melodic grip this would mean that enriched harmonic sense which characterizes the men of the time in France and would at once have rendered his airs less obvious and more truly songful.

But the slight vocal demand made by his music is plain from the fact that Miss Gauden will appear in three Massenet operas and as Melisande in the same week. In Miss Gauden's case appear is the word—for she is indeed an apparition of loveliness whatever she does and the remarkable poise of her art makes her convincing even amid the flimsy mockery of such a characterization as Thais. "Our Lady's Juggler" is the first of the group. This opera seems to have more character than others of Massenet's, musically considered, not because it is of different musical texture, for the composer always out-Massenets himself with his suave melody and delicate lacy harmonies, but because the story is so unusual and gives opportunity for the introduction of folk songs.

These are, indeed, a novelty to the atmosphere of sophistication in which most of Massenet's creations draw their breath. "La Navarraise" and "Thais" are of the earth, earthly, of the world, worldly. In "Thais" the composer perhaps sought to break outside the traditions of his school by laying the opening scene in a retreat of holy men, one of whom "rows" to free a distant city from spell of the enchantment, Thais. She succumbs to him through her awakened love of him—clearly seen to be the fascination of a man who can resist her charms—and by the time he has at last been conquered by her submissive devotion she has herself turned religious. He then returns to his retreat, while she gets her to a nunnery. The role of Thais was created by Sybil Sanderson in Paris, March 16, 1894. The book is by Anatole France, the libretto arranged by Louis Gallet.

There are few things in stageland less convincing than the opening scene of this work as one sees it at the grand opera in Paris. The gorgeous house and brilliant company, the perfect artistic gradation of color and group of the tableau, are so thoroughly of Paris that it would require a great artist indeed to persuade us that he was truly in earnest in his vows. The anchorite sings of his holy resolves with the smooth artistry and the finish of style that betray him even if his well-fed embonpoint had not done so at the first glance. His brothers in his life of plain living in the desert have also the unmistakable accent and build of the Paris grand opera.

In "La Navarraise" the composer chose a terrible subject, which is carried out with a realism of detail that is fairly ludicrous in its horror. Henri Carr made the text from the Basque tale of the Carlist wars in Spain, by Jules Claretie. Anita, a girl of Navarre, loves a soldier in a Biscayan regiment and the story hinges on the tragedy of the misunderstanding of her motives by her lover and of the terrible deed she does from patriotism and to win 2000 francs, set as a price on the head of the Carlist leader. She wants the money for her marriage dot, without which she may not marry her soldier. The first production was at Covent Garden, June, 1894. It is a short 50-minute opera in two acts.

In the juggler we have however a really convincing figure. He is not supposed to lose his truly naive phillistinism, and his mere good manners are natural enough, for all France has good manners, and so the atmosphere of Parisian exquisiteness which the music breathes round him is normal enough. He is one of the juggling buffoons, half minstrel, half wonder-worker (little deceiving) who were truly the precursors of the modern circus clown. He can sing a popular song, do a trick or two, dance after a "lame and unfashionable" sort to amuse a rustic crowd for an hour in return for a penny or two.

The city crowd at Cluny will have none of him until he ventures on a song of the most barefaced irreverence which draws the abbot out of the church. He denounces the juggler, but seeing the latter's tears seeks rather to convert him. He takes him into the religious brotherhood, and the scenes that follow of the rivalry between painter, sculptor, poet and musician, again give a new impression through the Massenet's shimmering veil of tone, because the literary material is novel.

Jean's own friend, Boniface, the cook, sings a charming folk song of the Virgin and the sage bush. We have neglected to mention the beautiful and characteristically Massenetian air in which Jean sings his farewell to freedom. "Thou coy and careless nymph with hair of shining gold." Finally Jean, poor boy, disconsolate because he knows no Latin, nor yet music or painting, ventures to offer to the Virgin Mary the one talent he possesses, his juggler's art, and dances. The others surprise him in the chapel dancing in an ecstasy of devotion. They fall upon him, crying "sacrilege." But the Virgin bends down out of her picture to crown him with an aureole and angels sing his passing—though just why he mounts to heaven at this point is not made quite clear. Public opinion all around experiences the conventional reversal, and the abbot has the last word, claiming for the brotherhood a share in the saint's glorification.

Miss Gauden sings, of course, the part of Jean. There is no woman in the opera, except the chorus of amusing and voluble marketwomen with their vegetables and fruits at the opening of the piece. Jean is scored for a tenor, but the great success of the work has been Miss Gauden's placing of the juggler of the old time whom she plainly declares in spite of the elegant but filmy trappings in which the composer has invested him. In the song that welcomes the Nazarene in the so-called oratorio of Mary Magdalene we read the words "ce beau prophète"; "this pretty music" is one's final impression of the art of Massenet.

"Griselidis" an opera with prologue and three acts by Massenet, which had its first performance in America, Jan. 19, 1910, at the Manhattan opera house, New York, will have its first Boston performance at the Boston theater Wednesday evening, March 30. The cast, which includes Mary Gauden, will be the same as in the New York production with the exception of Dalmore—Desires taking his place.

"Griselidis" was first produced at the Opera Comique, Paris, Nov. 20, 1901. It has been repeated many times since. One performance brought the largest receipts received up to that time at the Comique. Its success, however, has in general been only fair. According to Mr. Philip Hale, who cites M. Deshayes as authority, it was written some years before its first performance; thus the better-known operas produced earlier, "Thais" and "La Navarraise," are really later music.

The libretto is by Armand Sylvestre and Eugene Morand. It is taken from a play, "Mystère," by the same authors, which was produced at the Comique Française, May 18, 1891, and has been repeated there over a hundred times since. The play is little changed in its original made into an opera libretto; a prologue is prefixed and the "hues" set to music. The authors give a free and much changed version of the old legend of "Patient Griselda," which has had a place in literature since the eleventh century. It appears in the morality plays in France in the fifteenth century. Petrarch made a Latin romance about Griselda (De Obedientia ad Fide Uxoriam Mythologia) and the clerk in Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" tells of it.

An Italian poet named Zeno used the legend also for an opera libretto and it was set to music by a dozen or more composers between 1701-1796. One of these operas, Griselda, by Buononcini, brought out in London in 1722, seems the only surviving one. It was so successful that it is said to have aroused Haendel and provoked the following epigram from John Byron: "Some say compared to Buononcini That Myneher Haendel's but a ninny, Others aver that he to Haendel Is scarcely fit to hold a candle. Strange all this difference there should be Between twinedleum and a twinedlede."

There are English forms of the legend also. Thomas Dekker and other dramatists made plays of it towards the end of the sixteenth century. Indeed the name Griselda today has come to be a synonym for a meek and patient wife. In the opera we have still the meek and patient wife Griselda, but not the cruel, pitiless and abnormally suspicious husband, who puts his wife to many tests. Now Satan in person becomes the tempter, and the husband is changed by the authors to a very good husband indeed. The plot turns on the machinations of Satan. The question arises as to whether the authors have improved upon the old legend, which is of itself charming and fanciful, by this introduction of his satanic majesty. It is, to be sure, not very credible, but then opera librettos seldom are. The opera has a certain mystical tendency, perhaps due mostly to its medieval character. The scene is laid in Provence, in the fourteenth century.

The curtain rises, in the short prologue, on a sylvan scene, with the shepherd Alain discoursing on the charms of Griselidis. The Marquis of Saluces, wandering about his possessions, meets Griselidis, and loves her at first sight. To the despair of Alain Griselidis consents to become the marquis' wife. The first act reveals the Chateau de Saluces. The marquis and Griselidis are now happily married, and a little son, Loys, has been born to them. Their happiness is about to be interrupted by the marquis' call to war against the Saracens. He is advised by his chaplain, who seems to have a very poor opinion of woman's constancy for no given reason, to shut up Griselidis during his absence.

The marquis spurns his proposal and so secure is his faith in his wife that he defies even Satan himself. Satan overhears and appears in traditional guise. It seems Satan has a wife, and is a much heaped husband. To get a quiet moment away from his bickering helpmate, he takes refuge here in the castle chapel at the base of St. Agnes' statue. He offers to wager with the marquis that he can lead Griselidis astray during the absence of her lord. The marquis, at first angered, later accepts the wager, and gives his wedding ring as pledge.

The act ends with the tender parting of the marquis from his wife and child. Satan's wife is no doubt added to the story to supply a comic element. The second act takes place in a lovely garden overlooking the sea. Some months have elapsed since the marquis' departure, Satan's efforts to win the wager having been so far in vain, he asks aid of his wife in a laughable scene. They decide to tempt Griselidis, first, by the seeming harshness of her husband, so, disguised as a Levantine merchant and a Moorish slave, they enter her presence.

They presumably bring instructions from the marquis, that Griselidis give up her house, her authority and her wedding ring to this Moorish slave, showing the marquis' wedding ring, given to Satan as pledge of wager. To their chagrin the "meek and patient Griselda" (according to all the legends of her) at once obeys. Thus the first attempt fails. They then try the temptation of love. The shepherd Alain, her old companion of childhood, is wiled to the castle garden. This second attempt also fails.

The act ends with the stealing of the child by Satan, now thoroughly enraged at being cheated by maternal love. The third act is again in the oratory of the Chateau de Saluces. Again Satan comes, disguised as a man, to tell Griselidis that her child is stolen by a pirate chief, enamored of her beauty, who will return the child for the bestowal of one kiss. Seizing a dagger she rushes out to rescue her child.

Meanwhile the marquis returns and

London Musical Notes

LONDON—Miss Ethel Smyth's opera, "The Wreckers," has been given with moderate success. Miss Edyth Walker distinguishing herself in the part of Thirza. In the performance of "Tristan and Isolde" the part of the heroine was sung by Frau von Mildeburg, who is taking the trying part of Klytemnestra in "Elektra." It was owing to the special appeal of some music lovers in this city that London was given an opportunity of hearing this artist in her part, and her conception of the part was undoubtedly a revelation to many. The Tristan of the occasion was Dr. Banasch, who came to England at the last moment in order to take part in the performance, was not very successful.

Some interesting works were included in the program of the London Symphony orchestra's concert, at which Dr. Richter conducted. It would hardly be possible to hear Brahms' first symphony too often, especially when conducted by Dr. Richter, and the orchestra gave an admirable performance also of Dvorak's symphonic variations op. 78, a work which had been a good deal neglected over here. This was followed by Rach's Brandenburg concerto for violas, violoncellos and basses and the program also included Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Scotch rhapsody (No. 2).

At her vocal recital given in the Bechstein hall, Mrs. George Swinton gave the chief place in her program to Schumann's Liederkreis, op. 39. It was particularly interesting to hear this set in its entirety, and the songs with their varying moods were all delightfully sung by this talented artist. Four new songs by Albeniz, two by Liapounov and several English songs were also given.

The same hall was crowded for the last of Miss Elena Gerhardt's recitals, the singer being accompanied by Herr Nikisch. Miss Gerhardt sang seven songs by Tschaiikovsky, six of Brahms' Zigeunerlieder, and a group by Wolf and Strauss.

Concerts also have been given by Mme. Nina Menzies, Miss May Harrison, M. Alfred Cortot and others, the Oriana Madrigal Society giving their ninth concert, at which they sang some delightful things such as Morley's "Clorinda False" and Pilkington's "Sweet Phillida."

A noteworthy sign of the times is the production in Edinburgh under the direction of Herr Balling of Bayreuth of the "Ring des Niebelungen." The first cycle of the "Ring" has just been completed and it is safe to say that this has been no mere provincial production, but one of real artistic merit, and the success of the project has been as great as could be desired.

Miss Marie Brema announces a revival of Gluck's "Orfeo" in English, for six matinees. She herself will take the part of Orfeo and Eurydice will be sung by Miss Viola Tree.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN. "Hansel and Gretel," by Humperdinck, and "L'Enfant Prodigue," by Debussy.

It was certainly a happy inspiration to give an afternoon performance of "Hansel and Gretel" at Covent Garden, in that it enabled a number of little people that are generally in bed and asleep at the usual hour of operatic performances to have a rare artistic treat.

The fact that this opportunity was eagerly seized upon was made apparent by the number of children of all ages who put in an appearance in all parts of the house, and it was quite a novel experience to see some of the boxes of the grand tier filled with rows of eager little faces who had come to hear a new kind of pantomime where people sang all the time instead of talking.

And although in many cases the beauty of the music may have been less appreciated than the gingerbread house and the wonderful old witch who is so successfully baffled by the two children, still from a musical standpoint its educational value is undoubted, and it is well that the small people of today should grow accustomed to hearing what is best in music, and what could be more delightfully melodious and poetic than Humperdinck's beautiful little opera?

It is to be regretted that London audiences are not more frequently given an opportunity of hearing it and surely it would be well if all children with any taste for music were to hear it. So much depends on the early training of the ear, and it is entirely unnecessary in these days to give children musical rubbish to learn or to hear; if they are to hear music at all let it be simple if possible but of the best, so that instinctively they will learn to accept what is good and reject what is not.

The performance was conducted by Percy Pitt and the orchestra, although very good did not quite rise to the artistic height it attained in the performance of "Elektra," the brass being decidedly harsh and a little shaky, standing out too aggressively in places and thus marring the general effect. The solo parts were all well filled, Miss Ruth Vincent making a specially attractive Gretel and singing well throughout after the first few bars that seemed a little uncertain. Miss Muriel Terry was good in the more difficult part of Hansel and Miss Tubbs did very well as the witch (surely the ugliest witch ever seen in book or play) and the small parts were all well filled.

The annual banquet commences at 6:30 p. m. The speakers include Govs. Eben S. Draper, Frank B. Weeks of Connecticut, Henry B. Quinby of New Hampshire, Aram J. Potbury of Rhode Island, George H. Prouty of Vermont and Bert M. Fernald of Maine, Congressman Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, James F. Shaw of Boston, president of the American Street and Interurban Railway Association, President P. F. Sullivan of the Boston & Northern and Old Colony Street Railway companies, and William A. Murphy, private secretary to Governor Draper.

NEW DEPARTMENT FOR STATE URGED. NEW YORK—A permanent state department of commerce and industry is projected in a bill introduced at Albany by a Brooklyn assemblyman. The department, according to its provisions, is to have a commissioner appointed by the Governor by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a period of five years, at an annual salary of $7500. There are to be two deputies, each at $5000 a year.

The duties will be chiefly to investigate conditions affecting commerce and industry in the state of New York. The new department would in a very modest way serve the state in the same way that the national departments of the interior and commerce and labor serve the United States.

RAISE CORK OAK AS EXPERIMENT

Cork oak is to be given a thorough trial on the national forests, says Harpers Weekly. The Bureau of Plant Industry of the United States department of agriculture has assigned 2000 one-year seedlings of cork oak, now at a nursery at Chico, Cal., to be used by the forest service for experimental planting.

Fifteen hundred of these seedlings will be tried on the Santa Barbara national forest and 500 on the Monterey national forest in Southern California. Arrangements have already been made with the district forester for carrying out the work, and the planting will be done as soon as possible.

In addition to these experiments in California it is expected that 100 pounds of cork oak acorns will be secured from Catalonia, Spain, to be used for experimental purpose next fall. Cork oaks of considerable size have already been raised in California, and it seems entirely probable that they can be planted quite extensively in that state as well as to some extent in Florida.

DIPLOMAS GIVEN AT EVENING HIGH

Eighty-three pupils of the central evening high school were awarded diplomas at the graduating exercises held Friday evening in the English high school hall. About 1500 were present and a social time followed the exercises.

Mayor Fitzgerald complimented the students. The other speakers were Superintendent of Schools Stratton D. Brooks, Superintendent of the Evening Schools Maurice J. O'Brien and Councilman Timothy J. Buckley.

Principal A. P. Wagg presided at the graduating exercises of the Warren evening school Friday night. Mrs. Julia A. Duff presented diplomas to 81 pupils. The Hon. David B. Shaw in an address told of the advantages that Boston offered to secure an education.

The work of the industrial evening schools of Charlestown was put on exhibition at the Harvard grammar school Friday evening.

JAPANESE START SEA POSTOFFICES

The first steamship postoffices on the Pacific are being installed by the Japanese government on the new Nippon Yusen Kaisha liners placed on the transpacific service, says the Victoria (B. C.) Colonist. On board the Awa Maru, which left Yokohama for Victoria, B. C., a sea postoffice was placed, and letters were handled and sorted on the voyage across the Pacific.

The Tamba Maru and Inaba Maru of this line, and the Tenyo Maru, Chiyo Maru, and Nippon Maru, of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, engaged between Hongkong and San Francisco, are also being equipped by the Japanese postal authorities.

TOWN IN ONTARIO HAS MANY PLAYS

PORT ARTHUR, Ont.—A commission form of government is under consideration here and a deputation is in Toronto urging improvements for which the co-operation of government is needed. The deputation will later go to Ottawa.

The city wants to further its interests along the line of fish hatcheries. At Ottawa the deputation will ask for six experimental farm stations to be erected between Port Arthur and Fort Frances, with one supervisor. The department of railways and canals will also be approached for breakwater extension and dredging. The government will be asked to install a wireless telegraph station for shipping in the great lakes, for the widening of the Welland canal and the holding of the Selkirk centennial and world's fair at Winnipeg.

HARVARD'S APRIL DRAMA PROGRAM

The Harvard Dramatic Club under the direction of Frank Richer of New York will produce four one-act plays April 12, 14 and 16. The series opens with a tragedy by Paul Mariet '11, "The Better Way," adapted from the Spanish of Alarcón. The second is a farce, "The Marvelous Bentham," by Hermann Hagedorn '07. The third is "The New Age," by David Carb '08, and the fourth, "The Better Man," is by T. H. Guild, a second-year student in the graduate school.

The annual play of the Deutscher Verein will be "Alt-Heidelberg," which will be produced in Brattle hall Wednesday, April 27, and in Jordan hall April 29.

News of the Playhouses

AT BOSTON THEATERS.

"The Harvest Moon" at the Colonial, "A Certain Party" at the Majestic, "My Friend From Below" at the Globe, "Billy the Boy Artist" at the Grand Opera House, and "The Marriage of Kitty" at the Castle Square are the new attractions for the coming week in Boston playhouses. Except the last named play, all are new to this city.

Colonial—"The Harvest Moon."

Augustus Thomas followed up his first successful excursion into mental realms, "The Witching Hour," by writing "The Harvest Moon," which we are to see for the first time in Boston Monday evening at the Colonial theater. This drama shows the effect upon the heroine, Dora Pullerton, of the constant domination of her aunt, who never allows the girl to forget that her mother had a most unhappy history. So persistently does the aunt hold this picture before Dora that the girl gets to a point where she fears she will duplicate her mother's history.

From this state she is rescued, however, by a M. Vavin, a distinguished Frenchman, who discovers the baleful effect of the aunt upon the girl. He frees her from the domination through his understanding of mental forces, and finally reveals his identity as her unknown father, explaining that the history of Dora's mother was not discreditable, as was supposed. A minor plot involving the affection of Dora for a young author is also worked out to a happy conclusion through events that are said to be handled by the author with delicacy and originality.

The leading role of Vavin is played by George Nash. Others in the company are Miss Adelaide Nowak, John Stokes, Thomas Russell, Miss Margaret Sayres and Miss Jennie Eustace.

Majestic—"A Certain Party."

Miss Mabel Hite, long popular in musical comedy and vaudeville, has been elevated to stellar ranks, and will appear at the Majestic Theater next Monday evening in "A Certain Party." It was written specially for her by Edward W. Townsend and Frank Ward O'Malley. Miss Hite impersonates an Irish servant girl who manipulates her host of admirers to swing an election so that her master may get the desired office.

The second act shows the maid entertaining at tea in the kitchen of the candidate, with a large body of the force, and even the detective sergeants paying court to her. The political leaders are influenced favorably and of course the election goes the way the clever servant girl had first planned. Incidentally she has an affair of the heart of her own which almost goes the wrong way in her efforts to do things for other people. Several musical numbers have been introduced in the course of the play. Miss Hite is supported by a strong company which includes "Mike" Donlin, the famous ball player; John T. Kelly and some 25 others.

Globe—"My Friend From Below."

Next week's attraction at the Globe theater will be the comedy, "My Friend From Below," with the popular comedian, Harry Beresford, in the leading part. The authors, Harry and Edward Paulton, who wrote "Erminie," "Cynthia," and "Niobe," are said in their latest effort to have struck a chord of comedy that has caught the public approval. The play, it is said, has made a hit in New York and Chicago, as well as in London and the English provinces.

Harry Beresford, who in the past has won high praise for his work in "The Wrong Mr. Wright," "The Woman Hater," etc., has a character especially adapted to his personality and talents. Throughout, it is declared, the dialogue is crisp and witty, the situations, though natural, are ludicrous in the extreme, and at the same time there is an interesting plot.

Castle Square—"The Marriage of Kitty."

The John Craig players will appear next week at the Castle Square theater in "The Marriage of Kitty," a most amusing comedy taken from a French source by Cosmo Gordon Lennox and played in this city several years ago by Miss Marie Tempest. The plot shows a marriage of convenience that turns out to be a real love affair after a series of the most comical complications. Miss Mary Young will have a fine vehicle for her comedy and high spirits as Kitty, and the other favorites of the company will have congenial roles.

Vaudeville.

Jessie Lasky's Pianophonds, a company of young men and girls who play the piano in solo and ensemble numbers, will be a feature of the bill at Keith's next week. Others will be the three Ernests in a comical clown act, Simmons and Shields in a travesty, Stanley and Morris in a singing and dancing act, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Murphy in a sketch, Ansellotti and his wonderful dog Fila, and Mrs. Eva Fay for a second week.

Windsor McKay, the noted cartoonist, will be among the headliners at the GEORGE NASH.

Noted character actor who appears as M. Vavin in "The Harvest Moon" at the Colonial next week.

American Music Hall next week. Others will be Miss Hope Booth and company in her successful sketch, "The Little Blonde Lady," the Doria Opera Trio in grand opera selections, Caine and Odum in a singing sketch, Hathaway's troupe of highly trained monkeys in novel feats, Azard Brothers in feats of strength, Farley and Claire in a sketch, and Taylor Cranville and company in a short play.

Other Boston Attractions.

"Billy, the Boy Artist," a musical comedy version of a series of newspaper cartoons, will be the offering at the Grand Opera House next week. The company is large, handsome scenic and costume effects are promised, and the music will be characteristic of this kind of entertainment.

"The Traveling Salesman" has found a hearty welcome for its return engagement, especially since it is interpreted by the original cast headed by Frank J. McIntyre as the fat and genial drummer who becomes smitten with the village telegrapher at first sight and saves her property from schemers. Mr. McIntyre is extremely funny, as is the play itself.

William Hodge may have now begun to feel like a Boston resident, for he has been eleven weeks at the Park in "The Man from Home," and no end of the engagement is in sight. Mr. Hodge gives a sincere and always amusing interpretation of the shrewd lawyer from Kokomo set down amid matrimonial intrigue in Italy.

"The Man who Owns Broadway," the George M. Cohan play at the Tremont with Raymond Hitchcock in the principal role, is typical of its author. He has taken a conventional melodramatic plot and made it burlesque itself, adding tunes and dances for the company. The result appears to greatly please all who are fond of the Cohan brand of entertainment.

"The Midnight Sons" continues its engagement at the Shubert theater, as there are large numbers of people who like the form of entertainment it offers. This entertainment is served up most elaborately with an unusually large company, varied musical numbers, clever fun-makers and spectacular scenes of novel construction.

Announcements.

Prof. George P. Baker of the department of English of Harvard University, who has had much to do with arousing and directing interest in playwriting at Harvard, will deliver an address on "Our Critical Attitude Toward Plays" at the hall of the Twentieth Century Club, 3 Joy Street, Wednesday evening, March 23. Single admission, 50 cents at the door.

Miss Billie Burke comes to the Hollis Street theater Monday evening, March 28, in "Mrs. Dot," a new light comedy, by W. Somerset Maugham, which has proved of interest at the Lyceum theater, New York, during the past two months. "Raffles," the detective play in which Kyrie Bellew toured for several seasons, will be the attraction at the Castle square beginning March 28.

BOSTON OPERA.

PUCCINI must think that he has had his share of attention in America this year, so far as the new Boston opera is concerned. One or another of his works—"Boheme," "Madame Butterfly," "Tosca"—has been in evidence ever since the house was opened; and in the list of operas announced for the remainder of the Boston company's season and in the season of the Metropolitan Opera Company which succeeded it, more works of his have a place than of any other composer. Only a little less than half of the performances to be given between now and April 2, when the Metropolitan engagement closes, are Puccini performances.

This Italian opera maker holds out in his characters of Mimi, Cio-Cio-San and Floria Tosca apparently inexhaustible opportunities for the light dramatic type of soprano. The role of Mimi has become considerably conventionalized; but evidently not completely so, for Mme. Lipkowska says she has ideas of her own about it which she will put to the test at the Wednesday matinee of March 23. The role of Cio-Cio-San has been the property of Miss Nielsen in the Boston Opera Company's performances of "Butterfly." But it would in all likelihood have been assigned to another artist at one of the repetitions if there were another in the company with talent for impersonating the Japanese heroine, for Mr. Russell's practice has been to vary his casts as much as possible. When Mme. Lipkowska has given her interpretation of Mimi, every soprano in the company with a voice for the part will have essayed it. Mme. Boninsegna and Mme. Dereyne have each appeared as Floria, and Miss Hoffman will have her turn in the part when "Tosca" has its last presentation on Wednesday evening, March 23.

Whether "Butterfly" and "Tosca" are in the repertoire of the Metropolitan engagement at the Boston opera house in the week of March 28 to April 2 because of Miss Geraldine Farrar, and whether "Boheme" is there because of Caruso, is hard to say; but all three of the Puccini operas are to be given in Boston by Mr. Gatti-Casazza, in spite of the adequate presentation they have already had under Mr. Russell.

"Tosca," which Mr. Russell had the hardihood to produce after the great success made with the work by Miss Farrar as Floria and Mr. Scotti as Scarpia during the January engagement of the Metropolitan singers, was given its third performance in the Boston opera season Friday night with the following cast:

Floria Tosca.....Fely Dereyne
Mario Cavaradossi.....Florence Constantino
Baron Scarpia.....George Baklanoff
Cesare Angelotti.....Giuseppe Perini
Il Sagrestano.....Luigi Tavecchia
Spoleto.....Ernesto Giaccone
Sciarrone.....Attilio Pulcini
Un Carceriere.....C. Strosco
Un Pastore.....Elvira Leveroni

The opera of the matinee today is "Traviata," with Miss Nielsen appearing for the first time as Violetta. Mr. Constantino is the Alfred, Mr. Baklanoff the Genucci.

Tonight "Lohengrin," which was produced on the western tour in German, will be given its first Boston presentation in Italian; Messrs. Dereyne and Claessens, Mr. Hansen.

Monday evening "Rigoletto" will be sung with Mme. Nielsen and Messrs. Constantino, Baklanoff and Nivette. Tuesday evening the "Miser Knight," with Mr. Baklanoff, and "Pagliacci," with Mme. Dereyne and Mr. Constantino, will be sung; at the Wednesday matinee "Boheme," with Mme. Lipkowska and Mr. Jadlowker; Wednesday evening "Tosca," with Mme. Hoffman and Messrs. Bourillon and Blanchard.

The Boston opera season will close Thursday evening with "Meistersinger," the most elaborately staged of all Mr. Russell's operas. The leading singers will be Mme. Nielsen, Messrs. Constantino and Madones.

Monday evening, April 4, at 8 o'clock, "Faust." Tuesday evening, April 5, at 8 o'clock, "Traviata." Wednesday afternoon, April 6, at 2 o'clock, opera to be announced later. Wednesday evening, April 6, at 8 o'clock, "Rigoletto." Thursday evening, April 7, at 8 o'clock, "Louise." Friday evening, April 8, at 8 o'clock, "Tales of Hoffman." Saturday afternoon, April 9, at 2:30 o'clock, "Elektra." Saturday evening, April 9, at 8 o'clock, "Lucia."

CONVERSE OPERA PRODUCED. NEW YORK—At the Metropolitan opera house Friday evening "The Pipe of Desire," a one-act opera by an American composer, was produced as the first part of a double bill of which "Pagliacci" formed the second part.

The book is by George Edward Barton and the music by Frederick S. Converse, who is already known to local music lovers through his "Mystic Trumpeter" and other orchestral compositions. Besides its musical value, the occasion is unique on account of being the first English performance by the Metropolitan Company, and the first of an opera by a native composer.

The reviewer of the New York Sun found the symbolism of the opera clear, but insufficiently potent for stage use. He says: "The book certainly furnishes opportunity for picturesque groupings of nymphs and gnomes, for beautiful effects of light and shadow, for an exquisite woodland scene, admirably provided at the Metropolitan, and for moods not unsuited to the language of music."

"The score is not without beauty nor without promise. The instrumentation is certainly rich and solid and the final chorus of elves, though it has the flavor of ancient hymnology, is pleasant upon the ear. The treatment of the passage in which the wood folk call to the approaching Iolan is charming. It is the most atmospheric bit in the whole opera."

All of the first part of the work, that part in which the chorus and the ballet are employed, is full of pleasing music and the mass effects are well devised. There is here a perception of theatrical values which promises well for the future. Mr. Converse probably learned a great deal about opera writing last night and he probably discerned the fact that this first part of his work, though musically the most conventional, was nevertheless the most natural, spontaneous and theatrically interesting.

"The production was in every way a credit to the Metropolitan. Mr. Gatti-Casazza treated the opera seriously and gave it the benefit of his skill in the treatment of mise-en-scene. The stage pictures were admirable, there was a cast of competent American and English singers and Mr. Hertz conducted with genuine enthusiasm. Mr. Martin was the Iolan, Mr. Whitehill the Old One, Mme. Homer the Noia, Miss Sparks, Miss Snelling, Mr. Hall and Mr. Witherspoon the four solo wood folk. All of them discharged their duties with zeal. Mr. Converse was called out several times after his opera. The audience was cordial."

NOTES.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the tour of this month will be at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Monday evening, March 21, at 8:15 o'clock. The program is the same as that scheduled for the concert in Carnegie hall, New York, Thursday evening, March 24, and comprises: Beethoven, overture to Collin's tragedy, "Coriolanus," op. 62; Schumann, symphony in B flat major, No. 1, op. 38; Mozart, aria, "Deh Vieni," "The Marriage of Figaro";

Graun, aria, "Singt dem Gottlichen Propheten," "Der Tod Jesu"; Strauss, Symphonie Domestica; songs with piano: Brahms, "Die Nachtigall"; Schumann, "Widmung"; Fiedler, "Wiegengesang"; Strauss, "Standchen."

Bossi's "Paradise Lost" will be sung at the Easter concert of the Handel and Haydn Society Sunday evening, March 27, at Symphony hall. The soloists will be Mme. Jomelli, soprano; Miss Lakin, alto; Mr. Townsend, tenor, and Mr. Bidden, bass. Tickets for the concert can be bought both at the Symphony hall box office and at the store of the Boston Music Company, 28 West street. The performance of "Paradise Lost" will begin at the regular hour for Handel and Haydn concerts, 7:30 o'clock.

Miss Mary Grant, who has been Oscar Hammerstein's herald for the Richard Strauss operas, both in Philadelphia and New York, postponed the "Elektra" recital which she announced for Boston this week to Saturday afternoon, March 26. On that date she will appear at the Hotel Tueller, 270 Commonwealth avenue, near Gloucester street, and will give a reading of the "Elektra" drama, with piano illustrations of the music. Her recital is under Symphony hall management.

The People's Choral Union, now in its thirteenth season, is rehearsing under Frederick W. Wodell Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and the division of Haydn's "Seasons" which singing societies find the most interesting to study, "Spring."

The Kneisel string quartet will give its last concert of the season at Chickering hall Tuesday evening, March 22. The program includes Mozart's quartet in B

FAVORS TURBINES FOR CARGO BOATS

LONDON—In an address before the Institute of Naval Architecture, Charles Algernon Parsons, the inventor of the turbine engine, read a paper in reference to experiments dealing with the application of turbines to merchant marine ships.

Heretofore these turbines have not been applicable owing to the high initial cost and the great coal consumption. Mr. Parsons has invented a gearing device which will enable slow speed vessels fitted with turbines to get a knot more on the coal consumption of reciprocating engines.

Under this plan the machinery will be 25 per cent lighter. The new proposition is expected to revolutionize the cargo trade.

NO RUSSELL WILL TESTIMONY TODAY

No hearing was given today in the Russell will case now pending in the Middlesex probate court. The hearing will be resumed Monday when counsel for the claimant will introduce more expert testimony in behalf of his client.

Dr. A. H. Hamilton of Auburn, N. Y., a handwriting expert, on the stand late Friday testified that on examination he had found that many of the letters and papers exhibited in court as having been written by the claimant showed unmistakable signs of artificial aging. He said he also found evidence of erasures.

WHERE SOROLLA WORKS.
On the wide, far-stretching beach at Valencia, Spain, among the hundreds of fishing boats, open to the sky, but enclosed by a high board fence on three sides and the Mediterranean on the fourth, the world-famous painter Joaquin Sorolla y Bastida has his only studio. The life of the fisherman with his ever-picturesque and graceful boats, the oxen who patiently pull the boats out and in the water, the children bathing and playing in the surf with the occasional striped parasol and gay dress of a watchful mama, and all under the colorful and dazzling sunshine of the east coast of Spain, are to the painter a perpetual and never-failing source of inspiration.

This man, who stirred New York and Boston last year as perhaps no one artist has ever done, lives in all simplicity with his devoted and charming family in a little house near the beach at Valencia. His official residence is in Madrid, but he is there less than one month of the twelve.

A party of Americans called on him and one of the party gives the following account of the visit:
"When we called on him one July evening at 6 o'clock, he came directly from his work to greet us, a sturdy man slightly below the average height, his blue linen work shirt open at the neck showing his sunburned throat, his grizzled hair tossed by the wind—a man radiating the joy of living and working, full of the vitality, the very spirit of eternal youth. Our understanding of Spanish or French was most limited and his of English more so, yet we got along famously, his intense enthusiasm, reinforced by most expressive and snapping black eyes made us understand in spite of our linguistic shortcomings and encouraged in our own work by this brief glimpse of a truly great modern painter in his own home."

NATIONAL ACADEMY EXHIBIT.
The spring exhibition of the National Academy of Design at New York contains over 400 paintings and 35 pieces of sculpture. In the large gallery the chief center is given to E. J. Vaughan's "Buccanniers," a large marine piece with a great ship relieved against the sky on immense waves, while a band of buccanniers board a merchant vessel in the immediate foreground. The sea is finely painted, and so is the ship, but the invaders do not seem to be quite as well painted as could be wished.

This picture has been honored by the award of the Thomas B. Clarke prize of $300. This stamps it, officially speaking as the best figure composition by an American in the exhibition. The Julius Hallgarten prizes have been awarded as follows: First to Gifford Beal for his "Palisades," second to Louis D. Vallant for his "Woodland Play," and third to Charles Rosen for his "Summer Breeze." The Inness gold medal has been awarded to J. Francis Murphy for his landscape entitled "The Shadow of the Hills." The Sallis medal goes to Douglas Volk for "The Little Sister." Susan Watkins has received the Julia A. Shaw prize for the most meritorious work by an American woman.

Other works of merit are by John S. Sargent, "Venetian Water Carriers," "November" by Merritt Post, "The Pot Bird" by J. Alden Weir, "Brothers" by Lydia F. Emmet, "The Song" by Hugo Ballin, "Winter Twilight" by John J. Enneking, "An Italian Garden" by William M. Chase, and others.

Art, Artists and Their Work

TER MEULEN'S SHEEP PAINTINGS.

FRANCOIS PIETER TER MEULEN was born in 1843, in Holland, and is a resident of The Hague. An exhibition of his paintings was opened Friday at the gallery of R. C. & N. M. Vose, 320 Boylston street, Boston, Mass. The exhibition is held in honor of the sixtieth anniversary in business of the elder Vose, who is still actively engaged in a neighboring city.

The paintings, of which there are 10, are mostly of sheep with Dutch landscape surroundings. They are masterfully handled and reveal the power that comes to a man who specializes and thereby studies unrelentingly into the subtleties of his chosen subject. These sheep are all out of doors in color and atmosphere, and the quiet, pastoral landscapes surrounding each group are broadly treated and painted in fine harmonies.

In the large upright (4) "Coming from Pasture" is a shepherd in advance of the flock, the movement being into the picture down a lane at the left of which is a shed. It is a picture that one could enjoy for years on account of its quiet treatment and repose.

Other subjects are: "The Willow Lane," "The Shepherds," "Sunshine and Shadow," "Tending Sheep on the Dunes," "Gelderland Pastures," "Sheep Grazing," and "Tending the Cow."

Ter Meulen was a pupil of J. van de Sande Bakhuizen and has been awarded the silver medal at the International Exhibition, Amsterdam, 1886; Paris, 1889, Gold medals: Munich, 1891, and at the International Exhibition, Munich, 1892. He is the president of the great art society, "Pulchri Studio."

His position is in the front rank as a sheep painter, his work is true in texture, movement, drawing and atmosphere, his sympathy with pastoral life a semi-circle, designed in soft delicate tones for the background, with scroll, eagle, vase and ornament in graceful outline. The other is an upright panel of bright hued flowers backed by a strong, deep ultramarine ground. The first is quiet and restful, while the second is compellingly vigorous and strong. The window exhibited here last year was purchased by the Worcester Art Museum.

In the water color room we see examples of work shown before, (1) "Fortune on Her Wheel" being one of these, made for the design for a window college girls might turn with interest. There are 42 of these works which will remain until March 31.

In the small gallery, Eliot Clark of New York shows a number of small sketches that are well observed and unconventional. They are landscapes, painted from the sketch book during a tour in Europe. Mr. Clark is a young man of artistic taste and discrimination and his present work indicates a bright career.

At the Normal art gallery, Grundmann studios, Clarendon street, the exhibition this week consists of oil and water color sketches by the Misses Anna M. Hathaway and Harriet F. Smith. The oil paintings of Miss Smith are ambitious efforts bearing towards broad treatment. They are not as successful as the water colors which are in several instances very charming. The oils are gray and strongly toned, but it appears as though the artist is not in sympathy with the medium. Some little pastel bits are interesting.

Of the water colors, the "Thatched Cottage in Brittany" is a thoroughly good study. The shadows are well toned, the out-of-door feeling is successful and there is a truth and unity present that is based on good observation and handling of the medium. The scenes include Ogunquit, Me., Scituate, Mass., The Fenway and Brittany, France.

Miss Hathaway shows several pencil sketches besides a few oil and water color studies of New England landscapes. These are more than ordinarily well handled, being bright in sunny effects, well balanced in color and excellently drawn. The exhibition remains open through Sunday.

An exhibition of water colors by Edward Norton Treadwell, an artist from California, is being held at his studio, 394 Massachusetts avenue, until March 28, week days from 11 until 5 o'clock. There is an unusual note in his work which contains no liquid or flowing quality whatever. The edges are hard and is keen and tender and his faithfulness to truth makes his work a delight to see and of lasting quality.

The exhibition is to remain open to the public until April 2.

JOHN LA FARGE.

The works of John La Farge were opened to view Friday at the gallery of Doll & Richards, 71 Newbury street. He brings some new water color studies, several in collaboration with Will H. Low. Two windows are also to be seen in the front gallery. One of these is in the Frick building in Pittsburg. (12) "Apple Blossoms" shows a branch growing apparently from the main trunk of a tree; on the branch and close to the tree the blossoms are clustered. A most unusual arrangement.

Two outline drawings in delicate tracery showing the scheme for arrangement of lead for glass windows, is enlightening as indicating the method of laying out the supporting surface of elaborate design in this material.

An interesting water color is entitled "Samoa Girls Wrestling" (10) and indicates a custom to which the American

INVASION OF AMERICAN CARS ABROAD REPORTED BY CONSULS

Automobiles Made by United States Manufacturers Are Gradually Winning Favor With the Enthusiasts in Many Other Countries, Say Government Agents.

Invasion of the foreign market by American automobiles is indicated in the reports filed by the United States representatives and published in the consular and trade reports.

That there is an ever-increasing demand for motor vehicles in Saxony is shown by the data, just compiled in the official statistical almanac for the kingdom of Saxony, which is condensed into the following form by Vice-Consul W. Washington Brunswick of Chemnitz:

At the beginning of 1907, 805 motor cars and 1415 motor cycles were recorded in the kingdom, as compared with 1909 motor cars and 2157 motor cycles at the same period in 1909, a net increase of 137 per cent for motor cars and of 53 per cent for cycles.

It is evident that the use of motor cars is more and more replacing that of motor cycles, which are now being restricted in Germany by so many regulations that the intending buyer of a motor vehicle prefers the purchase of a small but comfortable motor car rather than a heavy motor cycle. The same trend is also shown in the marked increase in Saxony of the proportion of smaller motor cars.

The number of motor cars of less than eight horsepower increased in the course of the last two years from 475 to 1078; that of cars with 8 to 16-horsepower from 200 to 447; that of cars with 16 to 40-horsepower from 125 to 383, while those with more than 40-horsepower fell from 5 to 1. On Jan. 1, 1909, 111 motor cars were used for trucking as compared with 32 in 1907, a remarkable feature in the development of the commercial use of motor cars in Saxony.

Of the 4066 motor vehicles of all kinds recorded in Saxony on Jan. 1, 1909, but 73 were then used for public traffic purposes and but 11 for use in connection with the work of the municipal government, such as the fire and public works departments. As many as 2037 were used for business purposes and 1414 for pleasure and racing purposes.

Poor roads and the high price of gasoline exert a restraining influence upon the development of the automobile business in Spain, according to United States Vice-Consul-General William Dawson, Jr., of Barcelona. But the use of cars is increasing, and with constant additions to the 3000 which were known to be owned in the country last year, there is thought to be opportunity for the creation of a favorite market for the American product. This is materially assisted by the known reputation of cars made in America for their ability to withstand severe road conditions.

The president of a leading automobile club estimated the cars in use in September to be as follows: Madrid and district 500, Barcelona and district 600, Guipuzcoa and Sebastian 300, Vizcaya (Bilbao) 200, Palma de Mallorca 300, Seville and district 100, all other parts of Spain 1000; total 3000.

There is only one Spanish concern engaged in the manufacture of automobiles. This plant, founded in 1902, has grown steadily in importance. It turns out cars of various horsepower, the most popular model being the 20 horsepower.

Imports of automobiles, while not very considerable, are important when compared with the total number of machines in Spain. The total in 1907 was 227 cars, valued at $248,774, of which only four cars worth $3400 came from the United States. France furnished 151 cars valued at $170,059.

The average price of a first class 20 to 24-horsepower four-cylinder gasoline car in Barcelona is from $3100 to $3175; second grade four-cylinder French cars of well-known make, $300 to $400 cheaper. Cars in use here range from 16 to 40-horsepower, the most popular car being the 16 to 20 horsepower. Steam cars have been tried, but given up. Steam cars and electric runabouts ought, however, to have a decided advantage in Spain on account of the high price of gasoline.

GROUT MODELS ARE PLEASING

The Company Is Pursuing an Aggressive Policy With E. P. Forbes in Charge of the Local Branch.

One of the pioneer automobiles of this country is the Grout and the fact that it is so popular today among the purchasers of the higher-priced cars speaks well for the high grade of manufacturing that its makers have always been noted for. The 1910 model is a staunch car that will require little repair work during a year's motoring and that can be operated at a minimum cost.

A reorganization has recently been effected in the company at Orange and an aggressive policy mapped out. The Boston branch is now located in the motor mart, with E. P. Forbes as manager.

This year's Grout is designed as a five-passenger touring car and also as a toy tonneau. Its motor is four cylinders, giving it 45 horsepower. The valves are interchangeable, mechanically operated and both sets are on the same side. The lubrication system employs a circulating pump, which is located in the bottom of the crankcase, there also being a gauge in the reservoir. The clutch is of the leather-faced cone type and the cooling is by means of a honeycomb radiator and a gear pump, the latter being driven direct from the camshaft. The motor bearings are of hammered habbit and bronze, while in the transmission, which is of the selective type, Hess-Bright ball bearings are used. The axles are an I-beam in front and floating in the rear and use Timken roller bearings. There are two universal joints on the propeller shaft and a straight line drive is had through strut rods.

The dual system of ignition is used, and the springs are semielliptic in the front and semielliptic platform in the rear. The wheel base is 123 inches and the wheels are 36 inches. A feature of the Grout is the steel dustpan under the power plant, which is held in place by a clamp so that it is possible to lower the pan and reach the power plant for adjustment purposes. The body is of metal construction.

ALUMINUM SOLDER FOR AUTOMOBILES

Automobile manufacturers and dealers are taking considerable interest in aluminum solder which is the invention of Joseph Silver and which has been used with much success in soldering broken parts of automobiles which are made of aluminum.

Mr. Silver claims many advantages for his product over ordinary solder, among other things that it is the only known solder that can be used with any degree of satisfaction for repairing broken pieces of aluminum. Not only can it be used as a solder, but it can be used as a metal itself.

Some idea of the tensile strength of the solder may be obtained from a report by Professor Miller of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in which he states that in a recent test it withstood a force of 11,000 pounds to the square inch.

A number of the large automobile repair shops have bought sample lots and that they are well pleased with the result is shown by the fact that since making the first purchases they have placed many duplicate orders. The solder is manufactured and sold by the Aluminum Solder Company of this city.

THE CARDAN SHAFT.

Cardan shaft is a term that slides glibly enough from the motorist's tongue, but a discussion of the subject shows generally that very few even of the better posted ones know just how the term originated. A discussion of the subject in England recently brought out the fact that even though the cardan shaft is an important part of the mechanism of such a latter day product as the motor car it was originated in the sixteenth century. According to the historian of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company of Buffalo the name comes from that of Geronimo Cardano, a mathematician and physician of Italy, the first man to transmit power by a shaft and universal joint. The French, who have the habit of assimilating names into their vocabulary, soon had the word "cardan" in their dictionaries and now it has come into general use as a mechanical term.

New Auto Race Prize

THE NEW W. B. $5000 TROPHY.

The speed carnival of the Florida East Coast Automobile Association to be held on the beach at Daytona March 22-24 will include the first race for an entirely new prize, which is known as the W. B. $5000 trophy and which must be won twice in succession before becoming the property of the winner. This prize is to be offered for the 300-mile free for all event, as it is thought this contest will have the greatest number of entries of any race. The trophy is of solid silver, stands nearly five feet in height and is shaped like a Greek urn, being surmounted by a figure of Victory holding a laurel wreath. The base is ornamented with winged wheels and bears in relief a racing car at full speed.

THOMAS VICTOR ATTRACTS MANY

Famous Car That Won the "Around-the-World" Trophy to Be Exhibited in New England Cities.

The Thomas "Around-the-World" car together with the trophy won in the New York to Paris race, and seen by thousands at the automobile show, has attracted no end of attention at the local salesroom the past week. This wonderful piece of mechanism has traveled thousands of miles by rail and under its own power since its visit to Boston in January, when the drivers brought the car over the road, being greeted by Governor Draper and Mayor Hibbard. It has been shown at all the leading automobile shows, the longest jump being from Omaha, Neb., from which place it was expressed March 4 for Boston, reaching here the seventh. Determined to show the car in actual service it has been arranged to make trips to Worcester and Providence this week, followed by runs to other New England towns.

An unusual and interesting collection of photographs, taken of the car in various parts of the world, is shown at the Thomas salesroom. Included in the number is one surrounded by 20 world's champions for endurance by air, land and sea, with the American flag draped over the "Around-the-World" car, which so ably represented the stars and stripes. Among the champions are Peary, north pole discoverer; Wright and Farman, aeroplane record holders; battleship North Dakota; twentieth century limited; St. Ives, marathon record holder; Weston, long distance walker; Annette Kellerman, long distance swimmer; Spencer, 24-hour motor cycle champion; steamship Mauretania; Rutt & Clarke, long distance bicycle champions; Mathewson, National league pitcher; Captain Coy, Yale football team, and Harry Payne Whitney, captain polo team.

It is understood that this Thomas champion is insured for $25,000 against loss by fire or theft, which is said to be the largest amount ever carried on one automobile.

With the Automobilists

The Buick Motor Company reports that it had the best week it ever had at the Boston automobile show, when the company sold no less than 200 cars.

The Curtis-Hawkins Company has just received a new Speedwell car of the torpedo type from the factory. It is painted red and is one of the best designed torpedo models yet seen in this city.

The White-Ware Company agents for the Corbin car received word a few days ago that in the free-for-all San Francisco hill climbing contest the Corbin was the winner. In this same meet the Corbin won its class event.

The Corlew Coughlin Motor Company has purchased a 100-horsepower L. A. W. motor for its airship. It is expected that the machine will be completed early in May and ready for a flight from the company's building on Hawkins street, May 30.

The membership committee of the Automobile Club of America has received applications for active membership from F. E. Marshall, J. R. Stanton and William Hall Walker, all of New York city. P. W. Clement of Rutland, Vt., has applied for associate membership as a non-resident.

The moving of furniture by automobile is meeting with increased popularity about Boston and it is not an uncommon sight to see several motor wagons carrying household goods from one town to another and from one part of the city to another. Warner & Co. have done much along this line and are receiving the patronage of some of the best houses and private families.

The recent purchase of a 1910 model Matheson light six, toy tonneau, by W. P. Holliday, a prominent manufacturer and banker of Detroit, was an interesting incident. Although living in a city which produces a very large percentage of all automobiles made in this country, he went to New York for his car. He says he has driven a Matheson four continuously for five seasons, covering a distance exceeding 30,000 miles.

Harry Cobe, who has driven Lozier cars for a number of 24-hour track races and other events, has joined the Palmer & Singer forces. He is to be head of the road testing force at the new factory on Long Island and will pass on the cars after the other testers have tried them out. Cobe will be the alternate for Frank Lescault at the wheel of the Palmer & Singer stripped stock chassis that will be entered in the 24-hour race at the Brighton Beach motordrome in May.

M. R. White, formerly manager of the Standard Motor Car Company, has severed his connections with that concern. The company handles the Standard Six and Paterson Thirty.

J. H. McAlman, local agent for the Herring-Burgess aeroplane, announces that the work on the station which is being built on Plum Island is fast nearing completion, and it is expected that it will be ready for the initial flight which is booked for early next month.

The motorist who has endeavored to crowd a jack beneath a rear axle in replacing a tire will appreciate the specially designed seats for a jack on the Columbia rear axle. These are so planned as to prevent the jack slipping away from the load and mark one of the many little niceties which combine to make favorite the Columbia car.

A new booklet containing valuable hints to motorists on the correct air pressure for their tires is being distributed by the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, O. It also contains recommendations on the most economical sizes to use for various loads, together with other useful data on tires and quick detachable demountable rims.

The Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers will give, on April 7, at the Hotel Astor, a dinner, which will be attended by the officers of the 80 or more automobile manufacturing companies licensed under the Selden patent. The occasion will be representative of the automobile industry. The committee in charge is as follows: H. B. Joy, chairman, H. A. Lozier, Albert L. Pope, Benjamin Briscoe, and R. E. Olds.

George Robertson's new Simplex track racer was shipped on Saturday from New York to Los Angeles, where it will make its first public appearance at the coming meet on the big motordrome in that city. The car has a wheel base of 99 inches and weighs 4700 pounds. The power is furnished by one of the regular 90-horsepower Simplex motors with cylinders 6 1/2 x 5 1/2. It is built for racing purposes only.

Contracts for the improvement of the highways throughout the state of New York were awarded recently by the state highway commission at Albany. The contracts let involved the expenditure of nearly $3,000,000. Practically every section in the state will be benefited by the repairs. As a result of the success attending the construction of highways in New Jersey with bituminous surface, the New York officials have selected that material to be used and the cost of construction will average $13,000 a mile.

SHAWMUT TIRE POPULAR PRODUCT

An example of rapid growth may be seen in the Shawmut Tire Company of Boston, for they have increased their business and plant at an amazing pace. Three years ago the company started in the automobile tire business on a small scale, and now the factory at East Watertown is a large building which is operating all the time.

The product now turned out under the name of the Shawmut tire is one that is attracting a great deal of attention in the automobile world. A very popular kind that is causing much comment is the non-skid tire, which is a combination of durable Shawmut quality and construction that insures quick and safe traveling under the most adverse road conditions. These tires have no sharp edges to tear off nor any pockets to catch and hold the dirt. They also present a strong as well as neat appearance. The tendency to skidding has been greatly lessened by the inauguration of the Shawmut X-tra Thread tire, which embodies all of the requirements of the motorist in excellent shape.

The secret of the success of this company lies in their ability to manufacture through a special process from the rubber a tire that has all the requirements of such a product.

The process is described as a slow, low heat, one which is given to the toughest rubber and strongest fabric that is used, and thus adds great durability to the tire. It is said that the process is so excellent that the tires are protected from the friction heat that is generated in summer and against which motorists have to contend.

DRIVER SHOULD CARE FOR AUTO

The desire for economy in the upkeep of an automobile is leading motor-car owners everywhere to seek a driver who is both careful and versed in automobile construction. Experience as comprehensive as that of Henry Potter of Salt Lake City is wanted. He has had a course in the chauffeurs' school of the H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company, has driven thousands of miles in the vicinity of Salt Lake City and recently guided a 42-horsepower Franklin touring car on a trip of 14,000 miles through Europe. On the European trip the repair expense was less than $5.

"There are plenty of people who know how to drive a car," says this driver, "but that is the least important of all. The essential in the making of a good driver is the knowing how to take care of a car. A good driver should know the car he is driving absolutely. First, speaking of his experience in Switzerland, he says: 'On our road to Zurich we passed over the Alps, taking the same route that Napoleon did with his army. Most of the time we were 8000 feet above the sea level. While we were going through the pass I could not help but think of the changes in the mode of travel since the days of Napoleon.'

"All through Switzerland we had plenty of chances to try our Franklin on its ability to climb hills and mountains. The country around Salt Lake is bad enough, but Switzerland has Salt Lake beaten a thousand ways when it comes to climbing hills and mountains." he should make a careful study of the parts and see them put together.

Save Money by Using the Boston Shock Absorber

RIDE IN COMFORT AND EASE—NO BOUNCING

It makes fast driving over rough roads possible. It saves your tires and makes easy riding. It makes your engine wear longer and give more power.

The "BOSTON" is the only Shock Absorber ever produced that will fulfill all requirements demanded of a recoil absorber. All other Shock Absorbers are made at the most, in three sizes, the one coming nearest to taking care of your size car being made to go.

The "BOSTON" is made in four sizes to allow for maximum play of spring, and every size is adjustable to any tension of spring.

The BOSTON SHOCK ABSORBER will save wear on your car and on your purse. Material and workmanship guaranteed.

Buick
For 1910

Seventh Successful Year of the largest Automobile Manufacturers in the world.

Does This Mean Anything to You?

MODEL "17" The Buick Model 17 and Model 10 created—by their success—the demand for a standard Touring car at $1750 and a high-grade Roadster at $1000, with the result that today other manufacturers are attempting to invade the class for which we are responsible.

MODEL "10" The Model 10 was the first standard runabout ever built at the price—$1000—and was a success from the start in 1908, a greater success in 1909 and the greatest success of all in 1910. The thousands of these cars in use from Maine to California speak the truth for this sturdy model and tell a story of reliability that should appeal to you.

MODEL "19" WHY BUY AN UNTRIED CAR AND EXPERIMENT?

THE NEW MODEL at $1400 is the result of the demand by our customers and agents for a car between the $1000 and $1750 Models. In this car you will find the same high standard that is characteristic of all Buick models—the standard to which we owe our growth from an output of 18 cars in 1904 to 18,000 in 1909.

Stock Market Reacts, Closing Barely Steady

PROFIT TAKING AND SHORT SELLING ARE IN EVIDENCE TODAY

Recessions Are Not Particularly Noteworthy, However, Active Railroads Showing Greatest Decline.

LOCALS ARE HEAVY

Profit-taking in moderate volume aided, presumably, by some short selling caused some recessions in security prices on both the New York and Boston markets today. The opening in Wall street was weak, and during the first half of the short session the losses for the important stocks amounted to about a point.

The firmness of the New York market the past few days in the face of the disturbing influences at Washington, the increase in the Bank of England discount rate and the labor situation has caused considerable comment. However, fundamental conditions, particularly the favorable crop prospects, have exerted a stimulating influence so that some of the larger interests have advised their customers that they do not look for a serious break in stocks at this time.

Te bears got after Union Pacific shortly after the market opened this morning and caused a substantial reaction in the stock. It opened off 1/8 at 188 and dropped nearly 2 points. There was a good deal of trading in St. Paul and the stock eased off considerably. It opened 1/2 lower than last night's closing at 144 1/2 and sold down under 143. Reading opened at 148 1/2 and dropped 2 points.

Southern Pacific at 128 1/2 was unchanged at the opening. It lost over a point during the session. The copper issues were quite heavy, declining from a fraction to more than a point. U. S. Steel opened at 86 1/2 and sold down around 85.

The Boston market reflected the weakness in New York. Calumet & Hecla dropped 10 points from 620 to 610 during the early sales. Hancock was very heavy. After opening off 1/2 it dropped to 20 1/2 before recovering. North Butte at 42 was off 1/2 at the opening. It declined fractionally later. La Salle was off 1/4 at the opening at 10 1/2. It continued to decline moderately. Both markets were unsettled at the close.

MARKET OPINIONS

Atwood, Violett & Co., New York, say: "For the moment we look for more or less irregularity, though it is likely the prices are near bottom, and a resumption of the upward trend may be expected momentarily."

H. L. Horton & Co., New York, say: "The quick recovery of Pennsylvania on excellent buying suggests to us to again call your attention to the merits of this valuable security, both from a speculative and investment standpoint at these figures. With the assured increased profit from its New York terminals which will be opened within the next 60 days, added to the 11 per cent now being earned on the stock, the directors will be warranted in putting the issue on a 7 per cent basis at the meeting to be held around May 1."

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston, say: "The market continues quite evenly balanced, with fluctuations within narrow trader's limits. We see no reason to suppose that it will be otherwise for some time to come. Within the last few weeks labor troubles have multiplied and the political storm seems to be gathering. So long as these threaten, and certainly until decisions are rendered in the Standard Oil case, it seems quite useless to expect any concerted effort looking toward an advance."

Pettigrew, Bright & Co., Boston, say: "It is well to watch developments, to see how buying and selling are overdone or the reverse at times, to regard this as an eminently trading proposition, good to be in provided agility and sense are employed. It is a fine, two-sided, broadly varying market and we believe that it will continue so, barring the unexpected. Favorable supreme court decisions in the Standard Oil case easily might lead to a big outburst of speculation."

Walker's Weekly Copper Letter says: "Copper is dull and easier. Lake is 13 1/2 to 14 cents and electrolytic 13 1/2 to 13 3/4 cents per pound. Sales of small lots of metal by speculative holders are reported at 13 1/2 for electrolytic and 13 3/4 for lake. There was a slight reduction in the foreign visible supply during the first half of March, which is readily explained by the falling off in exports. The aggressive attitude of the labor organizations is tending to check general business activity, and domestic consumers are not buying copper as freely as they were a month or more ago."

OATS SEEDING IN SOUTHWEST.

Crop specialists in the field report that oats seeding is well under way in Kansas and Nebraska, with soil in excellent condition. These states last year had 3,543,000 acres in that crop and combined yield of 58,881,000 bushels. Area this year will probably be increased.

HEAVY FINANCING OF CORPORATIONS FOR THIS QUARTER

YIELD MUCH HIGHER

NEW YORK—Even allowing for a decided diminution in output of new bonds and notes during the remaining two weeks of the current month, new issues for the first quarter of the year may be conservatively estimated at $325,000,000, exclusive of municipals.

This will establish a new record, for recent years at least, exceeding the 1909 total for corresponding period by more than $50,000,000, the 1908 total by $185,000,000, and the 1907 total by $75,000,000. It is the more remarkable, too, since scarcely three weeks ago practically no bond men would have admitted the possibility of accomplishing so much under existing conditions.

Whatever the cause of the rush of corporations to dispose of securities with the tendency of the money market against them, the individual investor has had little, if any, cause to complain of inability to make investment income square more nearly with higher cost of living.

Out of 25 more important recent offerings he has in only one or two instances been asked to buy at prices netting less than 4 1/2 per cent, and in most instances has been able to secure more than 5 per cent.

The proportion of high yield offerings has been much greater this year than last, as will be seen from the following table, showing prices and yields of some more important new issues:

	Price.	Yield.
1910 offerings:

The comparison with 1908 is still more striking in respect to income bases. Representative offerings of that year included such bonds as Chicago, Indiana & Southern 4s at 91, to net 4 1/2 per cent; Pennsylvania consolidated 4s at 96, to net 4 1/2; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy general 4s at 95 1/2, to net 4 1/2; Union Pacific refunding 4s at 95 1/2, to net 4 1/2; New York Central debenture 4s at 91 1/2, to net 4 1/2; Delaware & Hudson refunding 4s at 97 1/2, to net 4 1/2, and Central Pacific 4s at 95 1/2, to net 4 1/2 per cent.

SHIPPING NEWS

More than $3,000,000 worth of cargo from Europe, South America and Cuba, is today being discharged from six steamships now in port.

The vessels are: Allan liner Numidian, from Glasgow and Merville, taking out a 1900-ton cargo of granite, case goods, iron and general freight at Mystic docks; the Leyland liner Iberian, Captain Jago, which brought here the largest cargo ever loaded at Manchester for this port, about 5000 tons, which is being put on the Clyde-street pier, East Boston; and another Leyland boat, the Lancastrian, Captain Fortay, is at pier 41, Hoosac docks, with 3000 tons of cargo stowed at London.

The Wilson liner Galileo, Capt. T. R. Watson, from Hull, Eng., is in port discharging 2000 tons of general merchandise, including large quantities of valuable chemicals. The steamer has 1500 tons additional to be taken around to New York.

Longshoremen are hard at work discharging a big cargo of hides, quebracho, wool and other South American products from the Houston liner Hydaspes, Captain McMahon, lying at National docks, East Boston, and the Danish tramp steamer Normannia, Captain Eriksen, from Cienfuegos and Havana is at the American Sugar Refining wharf discharging 3900 tons of sugar.

The largest cargo ever brought from Manchester to Boston is today being discharged at the Clyde-street pier, East Boston, from the Leyland line steamship Iberian, Captain Jago.

When the big freighter came up the harbor late Friday she was down to her marks and every inch of space in her holds was jammed with freight. The Iberian brought the cargo intended for the steamer Caledonian, which was obliged to abandon her trip to this port on account of a fractured shaft. Nearly 6000 tons was brought by the Iberian, the cargo consisting of machinery, cotton, hides, case goods and general merchandise.

CANADIAN NORTHERN CONSTRUCTION IS A GREAT ACHIEVEMENT

Third of Canada's Transcontinental Lines Already Has Completed Fifty-Five Hundred Miles of Road.

A BIG ADVANTAGE

The Canadian Northern is the Dominion's third transcontinental railway. It is already in operation from Quebec to Montreal and Ottawa, from Toronto to Georgian Bay and northern Ontario, and from Duluth and Port Arthur to Edmonton. Seven hundred miles of additional railway construction will extend Canadian Northern from Port Arthur on Lake Superior to Vancouver, and 400 miles will close up the gap between Port Arthur and Toronto. Four hundred miles more will link Key Harbor on Georgian Bay to Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec.

In other words, Canadian Northern has already completed 5500 miles of railway and 1500 miles more will enable it to span the continent from Quebec to Vancouver. The Canadian Northern railway's maximum grades from Quebec to Vancouver will not exceed 26 feet to the mile.

From Vancouver to Port Arthur or Duluth, it will have a shorter route than Union Pacific or Northern Pacific from Seattle to any Lake Superior port, and its low grades across the Rockies will enable it to handle traffic from the Pacific to Lake Superior at 60 per cent of the cost to the American lines. Indeed, Canadian Northern, when its line to Vancouver is completed, will have the highway of commerce between the Pacific ocean and the Great Lakes.

It will be 200 miles shorter from the Pacific ocean to Lake Superior over the Canadian Northern than over the Grand Trunk Pacific, although Grand Trunk Pacific's harbor is 500 miles nearer the Orient than Vancouver.

Canadian Northern has the advantage over all competitors because of its low fixed charges. There are only $600 a mile of interest charges against all its lines in operation. When completed from ocean to ocean, its interest charges and taxes will not exceed $1000 a mile, and these fixed charges include all interest on railways, equipments, terminals, express, grain elevators and telegraphs controlled by the Canadian Northern.

These interest charges of less than $1000 a mile are highly illuminating when compared with the $2250 a mile of interest charges of the Wabash, the $2500 of interest charges of Southern Pacific, the $3200 for the Baltimore & Ohio, the $6000 a mile for the Erie and the $6300 a mile for the New York Central.

Indeed, one of the greatest achievements in railroad construction ever known has been the upbuilding of the Canadian Northern to the position of a great transcontinental system at such an amazingly low cost of construction. This new system has not only chosen for its own the best and surest traffic-producing territory across the American continent, but in grades it has actually secured the best railroad highway across the continent also.

It traverses one continuous panorama of wheat fields or wheat lands from Duluth to Yellow Head pass, where it crosses the Great Divide into British Columbia. From Yellow Head pass to Vancouver down the Thompson valley and the Fraser, it will tap a region of rich pasture and fruit lands and forests. Its lines in Ontario and Quebec are all planned to develop the mineral, forest and agricultural resources of these provinces, while keeping in view the project of constructing a great transcontinental railway that shall surpass all others in freedom from curves and heavy grades.

The honor of upbuilding the Canadian Northern belongs to a man of unusual ability, William Mackenzie and Col. D. Mann of Toronto, in course of time it is predicted they will take rank among empire builders of the age, but their greatest monument will always be the Canadian Northern railway.

MARINE NOTES.

CHATHAM, Mass.—The tug Standard, New York for Boston, passed north by here at 9:40 a. m. After she passed Pollock Rip Shoals lightship the latter set signal letters "C. L." (meaning, Am disabled; communicate with me) and the Standard returned to the lightship. After the Standard started north again the lightship lowered her signals. The Standard probably has some communication for the lighthouse department.

SAVANNAH—Austrian steamer Giulia, hence for Barcelona, etc., remains aground and her cargo is being lightered, as tugs have failed to move her.

LONDON—Sch Anna R. Bishop, Jacksonville Dec 25 for Elizabethport, was passed dismasted, waterlogged and abandoned on Feb. 28, lat 37 deg n long 61 deg w.

ROCKLAND, Me.—Sch Allen Green, Weymouth, N. S., for Thimbleville, Conn., was rescued at high tide by revenue cutter Woodbury, from a ledge near Owl's Head spindle, on which she grounded Thursday; the schooner proceeded.

His prophecy fulfilled

Shortly after his election to the Presidency Theodore Roosevelt visited Oakland. In a letter written in Oakland at that time to a friend in Washington, he said: "Oakland is a city, just across the bay from San Francisco, where one finds the soft air of Italy and the beauty of English villages combined with a spirit of Western Progress and commercial advantage which will some day as far as I am able to judge from my limited investigations, make it the greatest railroad terminal on the Pacific Coast."

THE great railroads terminating in Oakland have authorized expenditures aggregating $22,000,000 for Oakland traffic and terminal facilities. The city has planned to improve her twenty-seven miles of water front by an expenditure of $25,000,000. Splendid manufacturing sites with rail and water transportation are still available at low figures. The climate is ideal and the residential advantages for employer and employee unsurpassed. Oakland is indeed a bustling, beautiful city of thousand-fold opportunity and 300,000 population. Write for souvenir book of views and literature free.

OAKLAND CALIFORNIA THE CITY OF OPPORTUNITY

The Hay and Grain Situation

J. Walter Sanborn & Co. of the Boston Chamber of Commerce—With only moderate arrivals of hay the past week the supplies on our market for sale have not increased and prices have held rather steady.

There is but very little really choice hay to be had, and such hay would command pretty full prices. The improvement during the past week in the New York market will have a tendency to strengthen our market somewhat.

Owing to the bad roads in the shipping country new shipments are limited and lighter receipts are expected for the next few weeks.

We quote: Choice No. 1 $23.50 and $24, regular No. 1 $23 and $23.50, No. 2 $22 and $23, also mixed $22 and $22.50, red clover mixed $21 and $22, rye straw $17 and $18.

J. E. Soper Company of the Boston Chamber of Commerce—Market closed lower than a week ago, although in the meantime it has sold about three cents higher for corn and about two cents for oats, but there was not response enough from the trade to hold it. We can see nothing in the immediate future to warrant very much higher prices, but would not advise becoming too bearish as strong advances always start from some dull spot like the present, and corn especially will advance very rapidly from some point, once sentiment turns. We do not look for oats to advance so much as corn but they will to some extent if they get any encouragement from corn. The receipts in Chicago lately have been larger than the demand but should receipts lessen, and it is natural that they should, when spring work commences on the farms, values should do better considering the present prices which are fairly low and about 11 cents under a year ago.

Feed trade is quiet. Prices are about 50 cents per ton lower. Cottonseed meal 50 cents lower. Gluten feed is $1 lower.

RECORDS OF OLD LONDON WILL BE SOLD AT PUBLIC AUCTION

LONDON—What may well be described as one of the most interesting collections of records of old London is to be submitted for public auction during the course of the months. The Gardner collection, as it is known, contains among other things some 60,000 prints and drawings illustrating the buildings, palaces and interesting old houses of London. A well-known authority on art, referring to the collection, said to a representative of the Standard recently: "It has been known, though imperfectly, to writers and historians as the collection par excellence of London. Indeed, the authorities of the British Museum have habitually, for 50 years, referred inquirers and those engaged in research to it for the information they are unable to supply, and many questions as to boundaries and sites have been settled through access to plans and delineations locked in its weighty portfolios."

"The collection is particularly rich in rare sixteenth century views and plans. One of its chief features to authors, historians, artists and actors is the unrivaled number of colored engravings and mezzotints of the old theaters, tea gardens, assembly rooms and places of general resort presenting vivid contemporary illustrations of the doings at Marylebone and Spring Gardens, Ranelagh, Bagnigge Wells, the Pantheon, Vauxhall, the Mall and Hyde Park throughout the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The old engraved admission cards and play bills—many of them very artistic productions—actually used by the very actors in these scenes and reveals, bring them very near to us. "The old trades and callings, too, are well seen in pictures of streets and shops, but especially in the street cries—none perfect of which has been known to fetch £1000—of which there is here a particularly large and varied series."

NEW YORK BANK STATEMENT.

The net changes shown in the weekly statement of averages of the New York clearing house banks were rather unimportant. The statement in detail was as follows:

	Decrease.
Deposits	1,241,012,700
Circulation	4,329,700
Specie	254,287,700
Reserves	319,702,000
Surplus	9,884,525

NO STORAGE EGGS IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK—Although the season for speculation in storage eggs has begun, not an egg has yet been placed in the warehouses.

This Is the Most Pleasant Time

To visit the Central West and California. Tourists are invited to stop over at Kansas City and San Francisco and personally investigate, at our expense, the farm and city properties in Southwest Missouri, Eastern Kansas and in California, on which loans bearing 5½% to 6½% interest have been granted and are offered for sale. Our thorough knowledge concerning these localities is at the service of those who want to increase their incomes. Many of the large life insurance companies and savings banks are making these loans for the purpose of increasing their income, and for the same reason they are just as safe and desirable for private investors.

We have loaned a large amount for many eastern investors and over $5,000,000 for one institution to their entire satisfaction (for whom we are still lending).

MASONIC LODGE HAS ANNIVERSARY

Marblehead Body, Second Oldest in the Country, to Begin Celebration Sunday With Church Services.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass.—Philanthropic lodge of Masons of Marblehead, the second oldest Masonic body in the United States, will celebrate its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary the coming week with an extensive program of events. The celebration will commence tomorrow with an opening of the lodge at 1 p. m., followed by the reception to the grand lodge and a procession from the Masonic apartments to the First Congregational church.

The service at the church will consist of introductory remarks by Clinton A. Ferguson, master of Philanthropic lodge; invocation and Lord's prayer, the Rev. John W. Barnett, Ph. D.; selection, quartet; responsive reading, William D. T. Treby, chaplain of the lodge; Scripture lesson, the Rev. J. Harris Barrows; anniversary hymn, written especially for the occasion, Mrs. Edward G. Brown; prayer, the Rev. R. Perry Bush, grand chaplain of the Grand lodge; sermon, the Rev. George Luther Cady, D. D., of the Pilgrim Congregational church of Dorchester; prayer, the Rev. William Rider, D. D.

Thursday there will be an informal reception of the grand lodge and guests in Albott hall at 4:30 p. m., followed by a banquet at 5:30 o'clock. Most Worshipful Dana J. Flanders and other guests will speak. An entertainment will be given at 8:30 o'clock and dancing will commence at 10 o'clock. Friday the celebration will be concluded with a historical address, banquet and entertainment in the evening. The lodge was organized and met for many years in the Tucker house, Prospect street, which is still standing. Steven T. Hathaway, the present secretary, has held that position for half a century.

HINGHAM TO FORM A CIVIC SOCIETY

HINGHAM, Mass.—A movement has been started in this town to form a village improvement association and a meeting will be held Tuesday evening at the parish house of the New North Unitarian church to consider the preliminary plans.

Ex-Gov. John D. Long, Miss Abby A. Bradley, Samuel H. Spaulding, George A. Cole, Edmund Daly and other influential citizens are behind the undertaking.

RECORD NIGHT SCHOOL CLASS.
WORCESTER, Mass.—The largest class of pupils ever graduated from the Worcester night schools was presented with diplomas by Mayor James Logan Friday night in Mechanics hall following an address by Joseph Walker, speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives. There were 96 students on the roll.

RADCLIFFE PLAY THIS AFTERNOON

This afternoon the freshman class at Radcliffe will present "The Hostage" by Thomas Nelson Page and "The Song at the Castle" by Mrs. Evelyn Greenleaf Sutherland in the Agassiz House theater. The cast of "The Hostage" includes the Misses Dorothy Streeter, Katherine Brigham, Edna Wetzler, Esther Pickering, Dorothea Williston and Edna Behre.

Those taking part in "The Song at the Castle" are Misses Dorothy MacInnes, Henrietta Dadman, Eleanor Danforth, Alice Kelsey, Dora Mavor, Inez McCaffrey and Marie Francke. Miss Edith Gartland is managing the plays, assisted by Miss Martha Eliot, Miss Elizabeth Cooper and Miss Pauline Logan.

JAPANESE DENY PLAN TO CONTROL

VICTORIA, B. C.—Japanese papers brought by the Empress of India from Yokohama contain spirited comment on the alleged utterances of the Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, that Japan aims at mastery of the Pacific and will not shrink from war to attain her object.

TOKIO—The foreign office denies the story published in a part of the press of the United States to the effect that Japan has proposed and outlined a new agreement with the American government and says that the agreement of 1908 covers all questions outstanding between the United States and Japan.

SUBMARINE TRIO PUT IN DRYDOCK

HARDWARE MEN'S LADIES' PROGRAM

Committee Outlines a Round of Pleasure for the Women Visitors at Convention Next Week in Boston.

The ladies' committee of the New England Hardware Dealers Association has outlined an attractive program for the entertainment of the ladies attending the convention of the association as guests. The events are as follows:

An informal reception, Mechanics building, at 1 p. m. March 22; at 2 p. m., opening session of the convention, Paul Revere hall, Mechanics building, followed by a vaudeville and minstrel entertainment in the same hall.

Second day, March 22, trip to Charlestown and the navy yard; noon luncheon at the Hotel Lenox; afternoon visit to the State House; annual ball of the association.

March 23, three-hour sight-seeing tour about the city in automobiles; 2 p. m., closing session of the convention; annual ladies' night reception and banquet, which marks the closing hours of the convention.

TUFTS COLLEGE GIRLS HAVE PARTY

The Lambda chapter of the Alpha Xi Delta Sorority held a party Friday evening in the new women's gymnasium at Tufts College. The committee in charge consisted of Miss Elsie M. Chandler of Peabody, Miss Ada L. Smith of Franklin, Miss Estelle F. Butterfield of Jacksonville, Vt., Miss Marie Wood of Mattapoisett and Miss Helen S. Burnham of West Newbury.

The Tufts senior class held its annual banquet Friday evening at Louis'. The dinner was attended by the men of the class only after the banquet started by the class of 1910 in its sophomore year. Clarence H. Dietrich of Cleveland, O., was the toastmaster. The speakers were John A. Adams of Hartford, Conn., James E. Douglass of Hull, Charles E. Dustin of Dexter, Me., Walter F. Gray of Somerville and Robert S. Fullerton of Roxbury. The committee in charge of the banquet consisted of Prentice M. Hatch of Somerville, George S. Hulen of Cliftondale and Edward E. Fessenden of Kingston, N. Y.

SEND TELEGRAM TO THE PRESIDENT

The New England Shoe and Leather Association sent the following telegram to President Taft today regarding the tariff: "The New England Shoe and Leather Association, representing an important international trade in leather, shoes, hides and kindred commodities, being anxious to preserve the present friendly relations between the United States and Canada, strongly urge you to do everything in your power consistent with national honor to avert an unnatural and ruinous tariff war between the two countries."

Y. M. C. A. WORKER
ON BATTLESHIP
First Secretary Assigned to Warship Is George A. Reeder, Now Stationed on the Nebraska.

NEW YORK—The first Y. M. C. A. secretary to ship on a warship as a member of the crew in the capacity of a sort of unofficial chaplain is George A. Reeder, who is now on the battleship Nebraska, which is now in the West Indies. It is the plan of the Y. M. C. A. organizers to extend this branch of their work to other ships of the fleet which have no chaplains regularly assigned to them.
Mr. Reeder is a graduate of Cornell. By the arrangement with the navy department the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. furnishes the secretary and the government furnishes his transportation, with mess and bunk. He messes with the petty officers.
He had some difficulty in getting close to the men until he showed them he could handle small arms with the best. After that his Bible classes and services were better attended. He has with him an equipment of moving picture apparatus, games, books and writing outfits.

WADE ELLIS IS RETAINED.
WASHINGTON—Wade H. Ellis will be retained by the attorney-general as special counsel in the Missouri rate cases which have been assigned for argument in the supreme court April 4.

WABAN
THE GEM OF THE NEWTONS
The great number of inquiries I am getting this spring about Waban and the sales that are being made show that the public realizes that this is without doubt the most attractive suburb of Greater Boston. It is high, has good schools, stores, is in the Boston Postal District and has everything in fact that goes with an up-to-date place. Why don't you investigate before buying elsewhere? Land can now be purchased at prices much below real value when location and advantages are taken into consideration. Stop and consider when you are buying a house whether or not you will be crowded out with apartment property in a few years when you have supposed the adjoining property to be restricted.
Other houses larger and smaller.
For anything for sale or rent in Waban apply to
JOSEPH CONGDON,
330 OLD SOUTH BUILDING, or 281 WABAN AVE., WABAN.

CHILDREN LIKELY TO MEET MR. TAFT
WORCESTER, Mass.—The idea of having President William H. Taft greeted by all the school children of the Worcester public schools and those of private institutions upon his visit to this city Sunday April 3, is being considered by the committee of arrangements for the railroad train service men's convention in honor of which the President's visit will be made. The school children may line up on both sides of Cambridge street and the President's automobile pass between them.
Officials of the American Steel & Wire Company have offered to throw open the company's three local plants for inspection by the convention visitors. Similar offers have been made by Worcester Polytechnic Institute and Holy Cross College.

TELEPHONE CALLS FOR MR. TAFT
CHICAGO—Two hundred and six telephone calls for President Taft during his stay at the Lullwater hotel during his stay Thursday were answered by Information Clerk George Smith, the calls ranging from a desire to "speak to Mr. Taft" to a demand that "my compliments be given the President, for I knew him in Ohio."
"The calls could not be delivered, of course," said Clerk Smith, "and I had to pacify the callers as best I could."

strongly in favor of any practicable scheme by which the manufacturers of New England could become a united body, working for the best interests of all. He saw no objection, at first glance, to the plan of placing the label on goods or on cases, but reserved further opinion until he should have had the opportunity to make a thorough study of the question. On the face of it, the proposition seemed good to him.

"I have been advertising in just this manner for years," said C. J. Bailey, manufacturer of rubber goods. It makes me smile to see Boston people just waking up to the value of such a scheme. Every article that I manufacture bears my name and my complete address. The result is that my name and my goods are known all over this country and Europe. I have advertised Boston all over the world."

Mr. Bailey said, however, that he should not care to adopt a uniform label, such as "Made in Boston" or "Made in New England," for the reason that his name in connection with Boston had established a reputation throughout the world already, and the proposed trademark would be of absolutely no value whatever to him. He also saw the probability that if the mark were generally accepted, shoddy manufacturers would be the first to take advantage of it.

The policy of each trade devoting all its energies to the advancement of its own interests, rather than attempting to advise in the conduct, or assist in the expansion of other businesses, was considered best by J. C. Morse, of the firm of Leopold Morse. He did not approve so much of the scheme of making a way for manufacturers of New England or Boston in outside markets as he did the constant endeavor of each individual manufacturer to produce the best goods possible, at consistent prices, which would surely, he believed, win their way through merit. His conception of advertising was that it should be used only to back up the goods.

TOWN APPOINTS ITS ACCOUNTANT

Albert P. Briggs was appointed town accountant in Brookline Friday at a special meeting of the selectmen. The selectmen took up the matter Monday. One member was absent and the voting of the other four members resulted in a deadlock.

Mr. Briggs was No. 1 on the certified list submitted by the civil service commissioners. The choice lay between him and Robert Logan, a clerk in the town treasurer's office, and Leon Allen, clerk in the school department.

PRESIDENT DESIRES CAMPAIGN PLEDGES OF PARTY FULFILLED

are expected to take part in the tariff conference. The vexed question of the French tariff was finally settled today, when the President ordered the proclamation issued admitting France to the minimum tariff.

President Taft on his way east was the guest Friday evening of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, and in the course of his address at the banquet of the organization he expressed the earnest hope that Congress would subordinate and sacrifice individual opinions in order that the measures he recommended in fulfillment of party pledges should be enacted into law. He also hoped the party would show that it has "the sense and the discipline" to meet its responsibilities. He also rapped the special interests and their demands for special favor.

The President summed up the things which he declared had caused some of his advisers to characterize him as a bad politician.

In the first place, he said, there was the tariff law, and he added that a new tariff bill always defeats a party.

In the second place had come the corporation tax, bringing with it the opposition of everybody directly or indirectly interested in the more than 400,000 corporations affected by it.

In the third place, there was the postal deficit, which had been charged to the carrying of magazines and periodicals at 1 cent a pound. That was "bad politics" because it arrayed all the magazines and periodicals against the administration.

MISS LEBLANC DUE ON STAND MONDAY

Miss Irene LeBlanc will continue as a witness for cross-examination by Attorney Samuel D. Elmore in the Glover will contest before Judge McIntire in the probate court in East Cambridge next Monday. Attorney John J. Scott finished his examination of this witness Friday afternoon and she was then turned over to Attorney Elmore. Judge McIntire gave notice that all-day sessions will be held after Tuesday.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

TO BE REPLACED BY FINE HOUSE.

Beacon hill estates at junction of Beacon and Brimmer streets purchased by Bayard Thayer through Cabot, Cabot & Forbes.

Brokers and realty men have every reason to be encouraged by the present tone of the real estate market. Many important deals have been put through this week, involving thousands of dollars in improvements.

The typical Beacon street residences shown in the accompanying illustration, located at the junction of Brimmer street, have been purchased by Bayard Thayer of Lancaster, who intends to tear down the structures at present on the site and erect for himself what will be one of the finest residences in the Back Bay district. Nearly $80,000 is represented by this transaction.

Two largely attended auction sales were a feature of the week's trading, one of a large manufacturing property in Neponset and the other of a business building in the vicinity of the custom house. Another mercantile parcel in this neighborhood, numbered 165 Milk street, also changed hands this week. Several large tracts of vacant land in Roxbury, Brighton and other outlying districts have passed to new owners for development.

William J. Stober of Boston has purchased the valuable estate at 60 Pemberton square, consisting of a five-story office building and 1592 square feet of land, all assessed for $30,500, of which $23,900 is on the land and $6600 on the building. The price and terms are private. James D. Curwen of Boston was the grantor. Philip L. Schuyler, Easton building, was the broker.

OTHER CITY TRANSACTIONS.

Carlton A. Perry has purchased from Sarah B. Swett the four-story swell-front brick house and 2274 feet of land at 83 Westland avenue, near Hemenway street, Back Bay. Of the total assessed valuation of $20,500, the land carries a rating of $8000.

The property at the junction of Howard and Stoddard streets, numbered 25 on the former and 2 and 4 on the latter, in the West End, has been transferred to Michael J. Dowd. It comprises a 4½-story brick building and 1219 square feet of land, all assessed on a valuation of $29,000, of which $24,400 is on the land.

Another transaction in the West End is the sale of two brick houses and 1800 feet of land numbered 32 and 34 North Anderson street, near Parkman street. The assessors value the land at $5000. The buildings are not yet assessed.

Title to the new brick building at 38 Parkman street, West End, adjoining the Winchell school lot, has passed from Eli Burgin to Pauline Geffen. The 716 feet of land on which it stands is assessed at $2000; the building is not yet assessed.

IMPORTANT CAMBRIDGE DEAL.

A transaction of considerable importance to Cambridge has just been closed. H. Douglass Campbell of Brookline, representing a syndicate of Washington and New York capitalists, has purchased two pieces of property in Central square, opposite police station 2, comprising the old engine house and a three-story brick block in the rear, bordering on River and Green streets, together with the two lots of land comprising a total of 4665 square feet. Henry Montague and the Cambridge Real Estate Association are the grantors. The purchase of the property, which was made through the office of Ryan & Katon, involved an expenditure of $35,000. It is the intention of the purchasers to immediately raze the engine house and remodel the other block, the lower part to be used for stores and the upper part for a vaudeville theater, an extension to the structure to be used as the entrance lobby for the theater, to be built on the present site of the engine house. The work of remodeling is to begin early next month and it is expected to have the theater ready for opening by the first of July.

MANY ROSLINDALE LOTS SOLD.

Agreements have been signed in the sale for Charles H. Johnson, trustee, of 34 very desirable lots of land located in Metropolitan avenue, Augustus avenue, Vista street, Edna street and Ethel street, containing in all about 120,000 square feet. This land is very high and slightly within three minutes of the Washington street cars and seven minutes' ride of the new Elevated terminal at Forest Hills. It is the intention of the purchaser, John A. Hovey of Roslindale, to offer the lots for sale at very reasonable prices, and to erect this spring a number of single family houses and bungalows. Warren F. Freeman, Kimball building, was the broker.

BUSINESS BY A LEADING BROKER.

Henry W. Savage reports the following transactions made through his office this week:

Final papers gone to record in the sale for Miriam N. Loomis of her two-family house at 99 Pearson avenue, West Somerville. Of the total assessment of $4000 the 3300 square feet of land in the lot are valued at $600. Catherine A. Richards bought for investment.

Milford.

The sale of the Catherine Cuniff farm, situated in Haven street, Milford, Mass., consisting of 16 acres of land, an eight-room house, barn and three poultry houses. All horses, cattle and personal property were included in the sale. The purchaser is J. H. Cole, who is to take possession April 1.

South Weymouth, Mass.

Final papers passed in the sale of property in Pond street, South Weymouth, Mass., consisting of five acres of land, an eight-room house, stable and two poultry houses. Clara L. Hollis conveyed to John L. Rudkins, who is to improve and occupy.

Woburn, Mass.

Mary Finen has sold her property situated at Cleveland avenue, Woburn.

Mass., consisting of a three-apartment house and 10788 square feet of land, carrying a total assessment of $4200. Peter Barsaglia buys for investment.

ATLANTIC-BY-SEA.

The beautiful tract of land opened up last September by Charles M. Conant, Old South building, has been visited by many seekers for both summer and all-the-year-round building sites and several transactions have been closed.

C. F. Brown of Dorchester has a contract for nine new houses in Ocean street and two of these dwellings will be completed by the middle of April.

Alexander Nicol of Newport has two houses nearly completed in Atlantic street and Squantum street, and is now framing a third house in Squantum street. These houses are a splendid type of architecture and will undoubtedly command a ready sale.

Jesse I. Spear of Avon is negotiating with the concrete bureau for plans and specifications for a cement house, to be erected on his lot in Conant road.

Edward Sweeney of Medford is putting in foundations for a beautiful residence on the Quincy shore reservation, corner of Atlantic street.

William Coulson of Dorchester is about ready to commence his house on the boulevard, corner of Billings street extension.

STRIKE PARLEYS ON IN TWO CITIES

CHICAGO—A conference between the representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Commissioners Knapp and Neill was held early today, during which the federal mediators made another effort to get the firemen to concede something and take a step toward averting a strike on 49 western railroads. The outlook does not appear hopeful.

A decision announced today by the state board of arbitration in the case of the Chicago yardmen, who made demands on 19 Chicago roads, grants a wage increase of two cents an hour, but denies double pay for overtime. Neither side is satisfied with the verdict.

PHILADELPHIA—The state-wide sympathetic strike will be called within 48 hours unless a settlement is reached between the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company and its striking employees. Peace negotiations, which have been in progress for nearly a week, were resumed today and the impression generally is that the deadlock will be broken.

RAILROAD BOARD'S PROGRAM MONDAY

Monday the Massachusetts board of railroad commissioners will give a hearing on a petition of residents of Taunton for improved service on the New Haven railroad. In the afternoon a hearing will be given to citizens of Westboro on their petition for a reduction of fares on the Worcester Consolidated street railway.

The board will take up Tuesday a petition of the Boston Elevated Railway Company for approval of a new route proposed for its extension to Malden. Wednesday and Thursday continued hearings will be given on a petition of the directors of the Boston & Western Interurban Electric railroad for a certificate of expediency. Friday petitions of the Milford, Attleboro & Woonsocket and the Interstate Consolidated street railway companies for rights to carry baggage and freight in the towns which they serve will be heard.

COMMITTEES FILE REPORTS IN HOUSE

These committee reports have been filed with the clerk of the House for presentation to the House Monday:

Legal affairs—Next General Court on the bill providing that in cities of over 50,000 inhabitants no boy under 12 years of age and no girl under 16 years of age, shall be permitted to engage in any street trade.

Roads and bridges—Leave to withdraw on the bill to require owners of motor vehicles carrying 10 persons or more for hire to file security for damages.

Prisons—A bill to require a description by the finger print system of all prisoners in state and county prisons.

Roads and bridges—Next General Court on the bill to incorporate the New York and Boston automobile boulevard.

Water supply—A bill authorizing the town of Natick to issue a $50,000 water loan.

NEW PENCIL WOOD IS FORESTRY NEED

Recent conferences of representatives of the department of agriculture with several lead pencil manufacturers have resulted in plans for testing new woods to find out whether they can be used in the pencil industry. According to some of the manufacturers, the supply of red cedar, which furnishes practically all the wood for the annual output of some 325,000,000 pencils, will be exhausted within five years. A substitute must be found which will whittle easily, which shall contain a large amount of material free of knots, which shall not be porous, nor spongy, nor unduly hard, and which shall occur in sufficient quantities to meet the manufacturers' demand.

REPORT MR. PAULHAN GONE.

NEW YORK—The latest development in the court proceedings against Louis Paulhan is the rumor today that he has quietly sailed for France, leaving his aeroplane behind him.

MR. HAWKES GIVES LECTURE TONIGHT

Publicity Superintendent of Canadian Northern Railroad Is to Address the Intercolonial Club.

Arthur J. Hawkes, superintendent of the department of publicity of the Canadian Northern Railway, is in Boston today to speak before the Intercolonial Club of Boston at its clubhouse, 214 Dudley street, this evening on "The Man with Two Countries."

Mr. Hawkes will take lunch today with Pres. Frederick J. Macleod of the Intercolonial Club and Sec. Asa R. Minard of the same organization.

Mr. Hawkes was formerly editor of the Toronto World and has made a special study of the needs of Canada and its development in relation to the United States and Great Britain. As head of the publicity department of a great and growing railroad stretching across Canada, with many years' experience in that part of the country, he is an authority on Canadian economic questions.

"The policy of Canada is to keep as much trade on Canadian soil as possible," said Mr. Hawkes today. "Special interest seems to be the hindrance to more cordial relations between United States and Canada. If the United States is to take the leadership in world politics its first step is to become the acknowledged leader among the English speaking people."

To that end, effort should be made to promote its social and commercial relations with Canada, the keystone of the British empire. Canada is tired of coming to Washington and getting a cup of cold water and a few crumbs every new administration.

"Canada is making it easy to increase the trade between the two countries, and for Americans to come into her country. It makes no difference what the artificial barriers are, the geographical possibilities will win out. If transportation between England and Canada can be shortened by coming through New England, tariffs can make no difference. 'If maximum tariff is enforced, America has more to lose than Canada. It does not mean an increase of 25 per cent in duties, but an ad valorem increase. Nobody really wants a tariff war. Canada would be very pleased to have an increase in trade, but this country must remember that there are not only British interests but German interests as well in Canada."

TELLS OF VALUE OF FRUIT AS FOOD

"Fruits, the natural food, please the eye and gratify the taste as no artificially prepared foods ever can," said Prof. William R. Lazenby of the Ohio State University in speaking to about 200 people in Horticultural hall this morning.

The speaker urged the value of nuts as foods, especially at the present time when the high cost of living is such a problem. He said that in nuts could be found many of the elements that are to be found in meat, and in a form that is wholly palatable as well.

Announcement was made today by the Horticultural Society of a great exhibition of orchids and other plants to be held in Horticultural hall May 26 to 30. The following prizes will be offered: First prize, gold medal and $1000; second prize, silver medal and $500; third prize, bronze medal and $250. There will be a large number of high money prizes in the various classes, and gold medals for various specified new shrubs.

SCHOOL INQUIRY PROGRESS MADE

The finance commission in a letter to Mayor Fitzgerald today stated that it would accept his recommendation for an investigation of the Boston school department. In order that this may be done, it asks for an additional appropriation of $5000. The opinion at city hall today is that there is no question but that this amount will be allowed.

The former finance commission declared that there was nothing in this department to which any objection could be taken. Since that time many have had the opinion that this was not quite the case.

Counsel and Play for the Boys and Girls

Children's Camera Contest

RAFTING AT NORTH SCITUATE.
First award—To Gladys Harden, Roslindale, Mass.

FAMOUS ORLOFF HORSES OF RUSSIA.
Second award—To Morris Weber, Roseburg, Ore.

MOST boys delight in rafting; so do some girls. The picture printed today of a rafting scene shows the girls largely in the majority. The first award in the Monitor's camera contest goes to Gladys Harden of Roslindale this week. In a letter to The Monitor she says:

"I am a little girl nine years old. I like to read your children's page and guess the puzzles. I can sometimes guess them and sometimes can't. I send you this photograph of rafting at North Scituate. I was on my summer vacation and we were playing with the raft and trying to get it out into the water, but we did not succeed. The water was not deep enough."

Perhaps if the would-be voyagers had persevered till the tide came in, their efforts would have met with success. Morris Weber of Roseburg, Ore., gets the second award, for a photograph of Russian horses. He writes:

"The picture shows four horses hitched abreast to an easy riding carriage on the steppes of southern Russia, where I visited last summer. The horses are all of the famous Orloff trotting stock, jet black, with beautiful, intelligent heads. Although spirited, they are gentle and kind. The roads turn very muddy in the autumn and good horses are required to draw the carriages at a fair speed. The harness is typically Russian and very artistic. The tugs and straps are thin, but of good leather, and do not hide from view the beautiful shape of the horses."

THE FIRST CANDLESTICK.

The first candlestick was a boy. He sat in the corner of a Scotch kitchen holding a piece of fir candle in his hands, from time to time cutting and trimming it to make it burn brightly.

The fir candle was a length of wood cut off a fir tree, which is found embedded in the peat. This kind of candle is still used in some parts of Scotland.

It usually fell to the lot of the "herdlad" to act the part of candlestick, but should a beggar ask for a night's lodging, he was expected to relieve the "herdlad" of his duty. A candlestick is still called, in Aberdeenshire, a "paur man," or "poor man."—The Child's Hour.

MUSICAL POKER.

Hang a poker from the middle of a long piece of thread. Have a companion hold one end of the thread between his teeth, and you hold the other end in like manner. Then strike the poker with an iron rod. You will at once hear a loud ringing like the sound of a clock striking. Solid bodies give out sonorous sounds, and the vibration of the poker passes on to the teeth, making the noise appear louder.

Behind and Cap: Space, pace, race, grace.

OUR COUNTRY.

Our country is something more than the single procession which passes across its borders in one generation; it means the land with all its people in all their periods; the ancestors whose exertions made us what we are, and whose memory is precious to us; the posterity to whom we are to transmit what we prize, unstained, as we received it. And he who loves his country truly and serves her rightly must act and speak, not for the present generation alone, but for all that rightly live, every event in whose history is inseparable from every other.—Edward Everett.

COULD SEE MANY MILES.

Two English "boy scouts" started to climb a hill, but when they reached the top they were disappointed to find that they couldn't see very far because of the mist. There was a countryman sitting on the hill and they thought they would have some fun with him.

So one boy said: "You can see a long way from here when there is no mist, can't you?"

"Oh, yes, my lads, I can see a very long way," replied the man.

"Can you see as far as London?" asked the boy scout.

"I can see farther than London," returned the countryman.

"Can you see America, then?" he was asked.

"Yes, I can see much farther than America," replied the countryman.

"Farther than America?" exclaimed the boy scouts, and they laughed heartily.

"Yes," quietly explained the countryman, "when the night is clear and there is no mist I can see all the way to the moon."

The boys stopped laughing.—Philadelphia North American.

"FARTHER" AND "FURTHER."

Says "Farther" to "Further," my peace you disturb. For you are an active and transitive verb. And always you're striving to further your cause.

Ignoring my rights, and King Grammar's good laws.

I'm only an adverb of distance, 'tis true. But still I've my place and my duty to do.

And I'll thank you, however at my protest you scoff. To mind your own business, and keep farther off.

You've work of your own, to push things along. And you're able to do it, because you are strong.

And I'll run before you to mark out your way. And help you to further things farther each day.

Your work is to boost things, and mine is to lead; We each need the other for making good speed.

So please on my province no longer intrude; "Thus far, and no farther," nor deem I am rude.

'Tis rumored that "Further" "acknowledged the corn," And said, "I'm a sinner, as sure as I'm born;

But now if you'll pardon my fault, on your grace, I'll trespass no farther, but keep my own place."

So each his aggressions has promised to curb—The adverb, the active and transitive verb:—

And now will all mortals this treaty regard. That King Grammar's reign may no longer be marred?—George L. Taylor in Good Education.

WHAT HE LACKED.

Man to Boy Fisher—What! Giving up already, my boy; you must bring a little more patience with you another time.

The Boy—I brought enough patience with me, mister, but I didn't bring enough worms.

Our Bird Friends

SPRING is here and with it come the birds. Do you know how to care for and tame the sweet songsters? Birds have to build their own homes. You can help them by cutting twine in short pieces and pulling it apart, by tearing waste cloth into narrow strips and by using cotton pulled apart. On the lawn place a pan of water and scatter crumbs nearby, and you will soon find your building material all gone, and will see the birds drinking and bathing in the water and eating the food.

A robin which built her nest in a woodbine over the door, being disturbed by painters, would not forsake her bird's nest. She got some white paint on her tail. So when she appears in the spring she comes calling "Here I am," and we know her.

The yellow bird makes her nest in a syringa bush and nearly splits her little throat with sweet carolings. The oriole hangs her home on the branches of the elm, and the woodpeckers nest in the maples.

If you will listen to the call of the birds, you can soon imitate them, either by whistling or singing, and they will answer.

LETTER FROM LONGFELLOW

No wonder children loved this great poet, says the Progressive Teacher, for he noticed their little ways and plays and let them come into his study often. One day he said, "Little girls, show me your dolls, not the ones you keep for company, but those you love best and play with every day." One time he wrote a letter to one of his best friends about his own little girls. In it he said, "My little girls are flying about my study like birds. They are getting ready to celebrate the birthday of one of their dolls." Below is a letter which he wrote to a little friend while he and his children were at the seashore.

To Emily A.: Your letter followed me down here by the seaside, where I am passing the summer with my three little girls. The oldest is about your age; but as little girls' ages keep changing every year, I can never remember exactly how old she is, and have to ask her mamma. Her name is Alice. I never forget that. She is a nice girl, and loves poetry about as much as you do. The second is Edith, with blue eyes and beautiful golden locks. She is a busy little woman and wears gray boots. The youngest is Allegra, which you know means merry; and she is the merriest little thing you ever saw—always singing and laughing all over the house. My little girls bathe in the sea and dig in the sand and patter about the piazza all day long, and sometimes go to see the Indians encamped on the shore, and buy baskets and bows and arrows. I do not say anything about the two boys. They are such noisy fellows it is of no use to talk about them.

And now, Dear Miss Emily, give my love to your papa, and good-night—with a kiss from his friend and yours.

Henry W. Longfellow.

EARLY BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The earliest English book for children was "The Babes' Book; or, A Lyttl Report of How Young People Should Behave." The book existed in Elizabeth's reign. The writing was covered with a sheet of horn in order to protect the lettering from contact with dirty fingers, says the Baltimore American.

The chap book contained most of the familiar nursery rhymes and stories which have appertained to nursery lore for generations. They exhibited very crude woodcuts, often with inappropriate color, and the commonest paper as a rule was used. They were hawked about by the chapman or pedlar and cost only a few pence apiece.

They served to perpetuate such familiar ditties as "Sing a Song of Sixpence," which dates from the sixteenth century; "Three Blind Mice," in use, with music, in 1609; "The Frog and the Mouse," in existence in 1580, and "Girls and Boys Come Out to Play," which was sung by the villagers in the time of Charles II.; "Little Jack Horner," we know, is older than the seventeenth century; and last, but not least, "Lucy Locket," the tune from which originated "Yankee Doodle."

A few of what were called "battledore books" have been handed down to us. They were three leaved cards, which were folded up into oblong pocket shaped volumes. These taught reading and numerals in the dame schools in town and country. The little gilt books, as they were called, adorned on the outside with gilt Dutch paper colored flowers, were much prized gift books of that period.

According to the Queen, children were employed coloring such picture books by hand, one child doing all the red in the series of illustrations, another all the blue, and so on. Of course they gained precision by repetition, but we very often find the tints overlapping, as if carried out by an inexperienced hand.

DESCENDANTS OF JOHN ALDEN.

A recent writer on the Pilgrim Fathers states that more than 500 direct descendants of John Alden and Priscilla are now living in this country.

BIRTHDAYS IN JAPAN.

Japanese children don't have separate birthdays. Instead, there is a festival in March for all the little girls and another in May for all the little boys.

So if you were a little girl and lived there, all your relations and friends would give you presents in March; your little sister would have presents on the same day, too, and so would your girl cousins and all the little girls you know, and there would be big birthday parties going on everywhere.

Then in May the boys would have their turn. Their festival is called the "Fish festival." Every family having a boy sets up a big flagstaff in the doorway of its house. On the top of the pole is a gilt ball, and flying from the pole is a whole string of fish made of oiled paper or cloth.

The golden ball signifies a treasure which the fish is supposed to be forever trying to reach. This means that the boy, when he is a man, will have to battle his way—in the same way as the fish struggle up the river—through life. It is a sort of little lecture to the Japanese boys to be ambitious.—Christian Advocate.

MONITOR BOOK OF GAMES.

PATCHWORK.

AFTER school, when your friends come to see you, provide them each with a slip of paper one and one-half inches by six inches; also give each a pencil. Tell them to write a sentence describing an action—the sentences, however, must be without grammatical subjects. To make this plain, here are a few specimen sentences:

—climbed up the side of the house with a ladder.
—sat down in the middle of the road and sang a song.
—went to bed with clothes on.
—wore a crown on his feet and shoes on his head.

When each has written a sentence, require the players to fold the papers so that the sentence will be on the inside, hidden.

Collect the papers in a box, mix up and pass box around, so that each one can take a paper without unfolding it; each player writes on the outside a noun, accompanying it with "a," "an" or "the" as she sees fit. Proper names may not be used.

After the second writing the slips are again collected, thoroughly mixed and again passed around. As each player draws a slip he looks at the noun that has fallen to his share, then unfolds the paper and connects the two parts of the sentence, either mentally or by writing the noun and its article in the proper place.

When all are ready, each one in turn reads the completed sentence.

The Monitor prints one or two games each Saturday. Cut out and paste in blank book and soon you will have a good collection.

STAMPED ENVELOPE ABUSE IS ABOLISHED IN POSTOFFICE BILL

Long Campaign of Country Editors and Printers Comes to Fruition in a Measure Passed by House.

STRIKES VERY ROOT

WASHINGTON—When the postoffice appropriation bill passed the House last week, it carried a provision prohibiting the postoffice department from printing anything on the stamped envelopes issued by the government other than a request to "Return in 5 days to —" with the name of the postoffice through which the envelope is issued.

This action was the result of a campaign which has been waged for a good many years by the printers and publishers of country papers who also have job printing offices in connection with their newspaper plants. They have contended that through the operation of an agreement with the contractors who furnish these envelopes, these contractors, with the active and persistent aid of the department, have invaded the domain of the commercial printers and have deprived them of a great deal of business each year.

The country printers have recently been joined in their fight by the Centralia Envelope Company, which has been urging action on bills restricting the activities of the department. This company has charged in its circulars bearing on the case that the department has been "aggressive and persistent in its efforts to increase the use of printed stamped envelopes." The envelope company also charges that the "department has repeatedly distributed broadsides through the mails, without postage, and by the agency of the postmasters and postmen, immense quantities of artfully printed and illustrated circulars, urging people to use more government stamped envelopes."

In the debate on the proposed restrictive amendment, offered by Mr. Tawney of Minnesota, the statement was made that the department has been unduly active in increasing the use of printed stamped envelopes, but the Tawney amendment was not adopted until after a vigorous fight on the part of the friends of the holders of the present contract.

So far as the postoffice department is concerned, there is no denial made that the use of stamped envelopes with return cards printed thereon has been encouraged. And whenever any question relative to this matter is asked at the department, the inquirer is referred to a letter written by A. L. Lawshe, third assistant postmaster-general, to the secretary of the Indiana Republican Editorial Association, in reply to a resolution passed by that association early in 1909, declaring that the United States government should not become a competitor of the individual citizen.

"As a matter of fact," says Mr. Lawshe, "special request stamped envelopes have been printed by the government since 1865. There has been no radical change in policy with respect to this branch of the postal service. Schedules and price lists have been issued to the public in some form or other from time to time, and under a previous contract the stamped envelope contractor employed traveling solicitors, who, however, confined their activities to the larger cities. It may be doubted whether the employment of solicitors in this manner was justified, but it is believed that it is justifiable for the department to bring to the attention of the public its rights and privileges with respect to the use of the special-request stamped envelopes, just as it brings to notice its rights and privileges in connection with the money order and registry systems, both of which are for the general good." (The black-face type used here is the writer's and not that of the department, but are emphasized as bearing on the charge of the Centralia company.)

Another phase of the question, discussed in Mr. Lawshe's letter, and adhered to by department officials today, relates to the probable increase in the number of letters that go to the dead letter office each year because they can not be returned to the sender.

Mr. Lawshe says that upward of 13,000,000 of pieces of mail go to the dead letter office each year for want of return address, and that if all mail matter bore a return address permanently attached thereto, the dead letter office could be abolished.

"The policy of the department," continues Mr. Lawshe, "is the result of years of practical experience with the question, and it is believed to be fair and just, all things considered. The government, under the constitution, has a monopoly of the mail service, and certainly it should not be hampered in the performance of its constitutional functions."

The amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill will keep the prohibitive legislation in force for only one year because the appropriations and limitations are for that period only. Representative Tawney, however, said that he would urge the postoffice committee to consider the various separate bills on that subject now before the postoffice committee, with a view to making the statute permanent. He will try to get action in the present session, so that it will not be necessary to resort to an amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill to secure a further observance of the prohibitive legislation.

Protecting Parks in a Great City

THERE is perhaps nothing more precious to or more appreciated by Londoners than the open places and spaces which are so abundant in the great capital, and nothing is more likely to rouse opposition from the neighboring residents than any failure on the part of the authorities to preserve the features of these pleasure grounds. In this connection it may be said that the efforts of those responsible for the upkeep of the parks and open spaces are crowned with singular success. To take but one instance, Hyde Park, which is the daily resort of thousands of men, women and children, is improving year by year, an improvement due mainly to the unremitting attention given by the staff of gardeners employed for the purpose by his majesty's office of works, to the beds, lawns, flowers and trees. Of all the London parks Hyde Park is perhaps the best known. The Serpentine with its collection of wild fowl affords a great attraction to the children, while on Sunday mornings the banks of this stretch of ornamental water are frequently thronged by crowds of people watching the thrilling races between the model yachts, arranged by a properly organized model yacht club.

To go somewhat further afield, Hampstead Heath is another of the most popular open places in the neighborhood of London. Indeed, it may be said to be practically the open country. The residents of Hampstead are, however, somewhat concerned on account of certain characteristics of the policy governing the preservation of the Heath and their feelings on the subject are to be expressed before the parks committee of the London county council. A society known as the Hampstead Heath Protection Society, has the matter in hand and will, it is understood, request that an impartial inquiry be made into the condition of the historical heath. The well known Leg of Mutton pond was recently cleaned out, and it is complained that the authorities deposited the mud removed in a dell near by where hitherto wild roses and other flowers have flourished. The dell is a dell no more and it is to this and similar actions that the residents take objection. The builders also appear to be making the heath a dumping ground for clay and builders' rubbish. It is to be hoped that the inquiry will result in proper measures being taken for the complete protection of one of London's finest open spaces, so that the residents and visitors may continue to enjoy the beauty of its scenery and that it may long continue to offer the attraction it has presented for so long.

Swinburne's Praise of Tennyson

Swinburne said that he composed the first three verses of "A Vision of Spring in Winter" in sleep. When he awoke he jumped out of bed and scribbled them down, and in the morning he expected to find nonsense. But he left the verses as he then wrote them, and afterwards added the remaining four.

Swinburne said of Tennyson that his Idylls were below the mark, that "In Memoriam" is perfect in its way. He especially singled out

"By night we lingered on the lawn," and he spoke with warmth of the fine lines:

"The white kine glimmer'd, and the trees laid their dark arms about the field." He said there were some beautiful things in "Maud," and that any poet, Shakespeare himself, might have been proud of the fragment beginning:

"I have led her home, my love, my only friend."

—Westminster Gazette.

Advance in Motoring

An article on the automobile of today in the New England Magazine remarks how rare a thing it is nowadays to see a car hung up on the road except for accident to the tires and these are becoming steadily less. At first one scarcely expected to make a run of a dozen miles without some kind of tinkering being necessary. The writer says: In the early spring of 1900 a great road race was talked of and finally held on Long Island, N. Y.; the distance, which at that time seemed almost impossible to be made without a breakdown, was for only 50 miles. The best time made was in the neighborhood of two and a half hours, and very few of the starters finished this race. Today we see racing cars clipping off 50 miles in less than 50 minutes and see them run almost 1200 miles on a circular track in 24 consecutive hours, which shows not only a wonderful speed average but great endurance.

Planting Sweet Peas

The earlier the seed of sweet peas is sown the better. If sown in fall and wintered over by means of an impromptu frame, the plants are much better than if sown in spring, but as this is out of the question for this year we will make a point to get them into the ground as early as possible. Plant the seed just as soon as frost is out of the ground. Sow in trenches six inches deep, in which some good manure has been turned under, and as the seeds sprout and grow keep them covered with soil until by spring the trench is level with the surrounding ground. In filling the trench do not throw in the soil with the spade, but take a handful and rub it between the hands to thoroughly pulverize it. —Garden Magazine.

Languages of the World

Statisticians who have delved into the subject of languages tell us that there are approximately 2750 now in use throughout the world. To give absolutely the number of tongues would be manifestly impossible, for the reason that there are still unexplored parts of the world where tribes are known to exist. Until ethnological surveys are made of every nook and cranny of this old world it will be impossible to classify all of the languages. —La Crosse Daily Chronicle.

Certainly it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence and turn upon the poles of truth. —Bacon.

THE TIMBER LINE

TIMBER line is a point of interest to travelers on mountain heights. There are cases where the trees stop short in an almost perfectly clean line, with suddenly nothing beyond but the humble grass and moss. In other cases the conformation of the mountain slope allows trees to advance skyward in irregular platoons before they fall under the chill regime of the high places, which says, "Thus far." Beyond timber line only moss and grass and flowers can grow—only the lowly things can find a safe abode on the mountain heights.

The elevation of timber line varies in different climates of course. It is highest at the tropics and drops lower in the colder latitudes north and south and also toward the seacoast. The sea has always the effect of making the summers cooler, since the sun's heat at the surface of the water is thrown off in evaporation so that the great body of the water remains cool. Thus the mountains nearer the sea have shorter periods of warm weather than the inland mountains and trees have less chance to get a start sturdy enough to resist the later cold. The timber line in the Himalayas is 11,800 feet, in the Alps 6400, in the Rocky mountains 9000 to 12,000—an average much higher than that of the Alps.

The cut shows a group of trees apparently fallen under the law of the timber line after years of resistance to the untoward conditions. But we are sure that the mosses still creep safely upward, even here.

To see ourselves interiorly, we are fain to borrow other men's eyes; wherein true friends are good informers, and censurers no bad friends. —Sir Thomas Browne.

TREES AT TIMBER LINE.

BEAUTY IN ART

IT is a much discussed question among modern devotees of art whether beautiful expression of that which is in itself not beautiful is art or not. The technical perfections and the good qualities of line and color in a picture, for example, are dear to many painters whatever the subject, or the idea conveyed by the picture as a whole. Especially in music this is a mooted question. If musically ability and effective portrayal of moods either of humanity or of nature is there, many musicians maintain that beauty is there, even if the mood that gives the impulse to the composition is in itself essentially ugly.

Now we may set aside here the deeper reach of the art which seeks the truth or beauty that may exist side by side with apparent ugliness of many sorts. It is plainly the noble crown of art to show beauty that is hidden to superficial observers; but whether the deliberate expression of what is ruinous, hateful, abhorrent, is truly art may certainly be questioned.

Perhaps in the realm of literature the question is more easily solved, since in the other arts there is more involved the matter of mere sensuous taste, as it is called—what the ear or eye of various observers registers as pleasant or disagreeable in the way of color, sound, etc. Literature's appeal is more directly mental, for even the verbal elements that make for beauty are more directly related to thought than the corresponding elements in other arts. In general one may say that only that is poetry which is beautiful. The unbeautiful might as well, even better, have been said in prose. If one demurs that many scenes of destruction, as storms, for example, are describable as beauty, analysis shows that here the beauty is not in the destructive element of the picture but in the idea of power, or freedom, or magnificence. There is incongruity at once when anything mean is expressed in verse. When thought becomes bare and common and ugly, like certain characters that are supposed to be drawn, there is no longer any poetry, only prose measured by the foot. So in philosophic expositions, the element of beauty being wanting, if mere logic or reason, as opposed to the heart's point of view, appears, it seems out of place in the fluent garment of poetry. Indeed poetry is not there, for her garment is not sheer. The endearing of classic art bears out Keats' discerning test, when he said: "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." If it is truly beautiful it is a joy, not a mere object of intellectual satisfaction or of the hypnotic fascination which many people feel in the ugly and terrible, but a joy; and it is a joy for all generations of men.

I've watched you natter a full half-hour
Self-poised upon that yellow flower;
And little butterfly indeed
I know not if you sleep or feed.
How motionless! not frozen seas
More motionless; and then
What joy awaits you, when the breeze
Hath found you out among the trees,
And calls you forth again.

To a Butterfly

Self-poised upon that yellow flower;
And little butterfly indeed
I know not if you sleep or feed.
How motionless! not frozen seas
More motionless; and then
What joy awaits you, when the breeze
Hath found you out among the trees,
And calls you forth again.

This plot of orchard ground is ours;
My trees they are, my sister's flowers;
Here rest our wings when they are weary;
Come often to us, fear no wrong;
Sit near us on the bough!
We'll talk of sunshine and of song;
And summer days . . .
Sweet childish days that were as long
As twenty days are now.

PROOFS OF CHRISTIANITY

THE teachings of Christian Science have been confounded by observers with various philosophies, from Platonic ideas to those of Berkeley and German theorists, and it has even been said that transcendentalism, as expressed by Emerson—who, however, never fully identified himself with the transcendentalist group—was the direct source of Mrs. Eddy's teachings. It is to be remarked, however, that no student of the writings of Emerson ever drew from that study anything at all resembling Christian Science. Even Emerson himself was never able to communicate to others the secret of his own serene and lofty self-command. It has been said of him that his life was the best lesson he had for the world, and was the most beautiful expression of his philosophy. The idealism of the group of thinkers that gathered around him and Mr. Alcott developed from years of pure and lofty aspiration, but it did not give birth to Christian Science.

Christian Science appealed first of all to persons of comparatively little culture and even like early Christianity seems to touch humble folk to a hitherto wholly unknown ideal. It has reversed the story of Emerson's growing popularity.

His books spread from educated people to the less sophisticated sort; Christian Science gained the attention of those whom we term intellectual only after the simpler minded had eagerly accepted it. No one was ever farther from mere theorizing than the writer of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." As Mrs. Eddy herself declares, she spent years proving in and through other people's experience as well as in her own the actual scientific demonstrability of her ideas before she wrote her book. (See Science and Health, preface, p. 9.) Christian Science is not to be read as a mere idealism that rests one as music, nature, even sleep sometimes seem to. It is from the beginning a Science, that must be applied as one goes along in order to advance in the understanding thereof. It is a definite call to action. It frankly states that no one can claim to understand it who does not to some degree prove his understanding by healing sickness and sin.

Christian Science is not to be considered on the other hand merely a healing art. It is Christianity pure and simple, and even as Jesus constantly illustrated his teachings by healing the sick and suffering all around him, so Christian Science affirms that the followers of Jesus must test their lives as he required, namely by the outward results or effects of the inward spiritual enlightenment. It is moral and spiritual regeneration that is the object of Christian Science even as it was of Jesus' work on earth; but if the inward light has shone the signs will follow. This is what marks the difference between the highest flights of the human intellect and true spiritual vision or understanding, a vital Christianity.

What Christianity has done for its followers is the actual proof of the distance between it and both modern and pagan philosophies and the mystical teachings of the east. Throughout the whole history of Israel, indeed, the outward evidence that their prayer was heard of God was again and again the sign of national faithfulness to the divine ideal. The Messiah, long expected, came at last, with signs and wonders betokening his divine commission, and said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." The condition of women under every other mental regime than Christianity points to important evidence of Christian truth. Wherever live Christianity has come the condition of woman has been lifted. Under every other system of thought she has remained enslaved save as an occasional notable exception. Moreover Christianity alone has preached a practical gospel to the poor, to the weak and ignorant and despised of earth. The most exalted teachings of old philosophies and of mysticism were to be grasped only by the exceptional few. They never reached the common people.

Christian Scientists recognize as clearly as their observers can that in adopting such a test of their own spirituality as Jesus set, namely the healing power, they are indeed placing themselves under an exacting standard. But Jesus said, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light," and those who come to him in the understanding of Principle know that it is only to the unwilling and resisting mortal thought that the demand of healing seems so severe a test. Those who really abide in him, as he said, and so dwell in the present consciousness of God with us, see that this healing work is as natural as the brightness and refreshment that to human sense follow sunlight and pure air. Those who love darkness rather than light and choose to linger in materialism or in the pleasant exercise of the more human mentality may indeed complain that such Christianity as this is too great for them. Those on the other hand who even for a moment reach to the holy of holies—

"That Hath a Pleasant Voice"

An "Excellent Thing" in Anybody.

"VOX et præterea nihil" is a classic way of stigmatizing sound without sense, but like the primrose by the river's brim, even if the voice is "nothing more" than a voice, it still has a wonderful charm. One may even read the Latin phrase to mean that there is "nothing more" to be desired or sought beyond this rare achievement of beautiful speech. That American voices are often so unpleasant is perhaps as much due to the national habit of hurry as anything else. The lack of poise in general bearing is also felt in the vocal tone. A peaceful sense of things should make the voice deeper, richer and words fewer. Shakespeare is, however, authority for saying that discourse may be sweet and voluble too, and he knew. The freedom of real joyfulness within is what makes either the singing or the speaking voice a joy to the hearer. Browning says a beautiful thing where feeling moves his heroine's speech.

"Her voice changed like a bird's.
There grew more of the music and less

But part of the musicalness of speech is in the clear words, the quality of the vowel sounds and the deft handling of the consonants. Affection in speech is not pleasant to hear, but if any one who is conscious of having an unpleasant quality in her voice—one uses the feminine pronoun since the men are not likely to bother with the question—will try talking less, insisting less on expressing her own ideas, feeling the gentleness and calm she would put into her speech, the strident, edgy element will fade away. It is nearly always when people are talking with some degree of excitement, pleasurable or otherwise, that the strident harsh sound of the speech is most noticeable; therefore guard against feeling too eager to be heard, if you would mollify your vocal utterance.

Pope had a close thrust at most human weaknesses, and it was he who said "Words are like leaves and where they most abound Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found."

and Byron found the keenest of all arrows for the heart "a sweet voice." We can then well afford to spare some words of our much speaking and take time to speak more at leisure, more quietly, less tensely.

Ideals of College Women

Doctor Jordan of Leland Stanford University emphasizes the spirituality in modern education by citing Thoreau's philosophy that, in the every-day living of profession or trade, it is possible to "walk in hallowed cathedrals." It is this incomparable spirit in the college women of this country that leads President Thomas of Bryn Mawr to say that the time is coming when a college-bred girl will be the only kind a poor man can afford to marry.

This ability to see the beauty in all service and to recognize all life as divine, in its very largeness of view is the thing that has been misunderstood by the conventional, and which has called down criticism upon the colleges. Doctor Jordan, for example, in the same lesson in which he exalts Thoreau's conception of living, says that the "new holy life of action" finds religion in love and wisdom, and not in asceticism, philosophical disputation, or the maintenance of withered creeds. —Cosmopolitan.

Giving Boys a Chance

In St. Louis, a number of manufacturers have arranged to help the boys in their employ to a little better chance at improvement than has been commonly enjoyed in the past. They give their boys liberty to leave their work and take seven hours of instruction each week in mathematics, mechanics, machine designing and draughting, and still pay them their established wages without "docking" for the time spent in making the boys more valuable to their employers, and of necessity—to themselves. There is in that city an established school of mechanical trades, and it has the endorsement of men whose practical acquaintance with the subject gives them a right to approve or condemn. Boys granted these advantages are required to be of a certain age, beyond the prohibition of juvenile court laws. —Salt Lake City Union-Republican.

Simple but Sufficient Reason

There have been a number of diplomatic posts which the President has had difficulty in filling. One disappointed candidate took the situation philosophically, though he considered himself beforehand "just the man" for the position. When his friend learned that he had been rejected, some one asked: "How was it that you did not secure the post of Ambassador to England?" "The only logical reason I can present, sir," said the candidate, "is that I do not speak the language of the country." —National Magazine.

An Interesting Book at the British Museum

In the King's Library at the British Museum a book of the greatest interest has just been exhibited. It is a copy of the first edition of Robert Greene's "Groats-Worth of Witte, Bought with a Million of Repentance." This book is valuable, not only because of its great rarity, but also because it contains an extraordinary attack upon Shakespeare. Speaking to a representative of the Daily Mail, an official at the British Museum said that "hitherto it has been believed that no copy of the first edition existed. We have purchased this copy, dated 1592, from a bookseller. We do not know its previous history." The attack upon Shakespeare is, as follows: "Yes, trust them not; for there is an upstart—Cromwell, beautified with our feathers, that with his 'tyger's hart' wrapt in a Player's hyde, supposes he is as well able to bombast out a blanke verse as the best of you; and being an absolute 'Johannes fac totum,' is in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a Country."

You cauliflower by any other name and it will smell as wheat. —B. C. Ely.

The Revolt Against Cannonism

THE inevitable conflict is on. The issue between regularity and insurgency is at length joined, and a few hours or a few days may determine one of the most momentous political contests, the country has known in years. Involved in its outcome is something more than the continuance or the end of Cannonism. The allies are by no means united on a single object. What is sought by the insurgents is control of the Republican party; what is sought by the Democrats is the overthrow of that organization. And with it all, the future of the national administration is at stake.

In such a battle terms are very likely to be confused. Already Cannonism is denounced as something new and alien to established Republicanism, whereas it is the outgrowth of the policies and the procedure that have given Republicanism prestige and power for nearly half a century. Cannonism, the machine, the organization, are synonyms; and yet, men who are up in arms against Cannonism today, in many instances, would perhaps have neither place nor prominence in public life were it not for what they have called in the past, and may call in the future, "the splendid organization of our party." Cannonism, the machine and the organization, are one. In truth, Cannonism is Republicanism as it has been understood, as it has triumphed, and as it has at times met with defeat, for at least a generation.

But now comes the other side. Republicans have become dissatisfied with Republicanism as it has been so understood. At first a few here and there, then in groups, insurgents have arisen. First confined to one section of the country, insurgency has become widespread. First confining its claims of grievance to some party acts or policies, it now arrays itself against ideas and measures in the maintenance and promotion of which the existing organization is vitally concerned. And it gives to all the forces arrayed against it the name of Cannonism.

As a matter of fact, the term Cannonism is a mere convenience. As much would be expressed by Aldrichism, by McCallism, by Haleism, by Mannism, by putting an "ism" at the end of any name closely identified with the Republicanism that has been dominant through all these years.

However this may be, deep down in the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands of Republicans today the conviction exists that the organization as it is has seen its best day and outlived its usefulness. The desire for a change is not confined to the rank and file. There is reason for the belief that many who are highest in the party's leadership would like to see it defeated for its own good. Only through defeat, reorganization and a complete readjustment of its policies to the needs and demands of changed times and altered conditions can unity and harmony and prestige be regained.

In his speech at Rochester, N. Y., last night, President Taft, with full knowledge of the situation, made it clear that he sees the end of the present regime in the House. His demand that Congress, if it be entitled to the name of Republican, shall fulfil the party's pledges, is in the nature of an appeal to the insurgents as well as to the regulars. "After this is done," he says, "it does not matter what happens at the next election. We will have done something the country will be grateful for, whether it thinks it ought to express this gratitude in the immediate future or not."

He sees, as do all intelligent observers of the crisis, that with the reorganization and readjustment which is imminent new men as well as new methods will come to the front. At the present hour the insurgents are asserting their claims, among other things, to recognition in the future leadership and direction of the party. It may be that they are pursuing a course that will soon place the party in the minority; all the more reason this for giving them posts of responsibility. Wreckage must be the inevitable consequence of the conflict now raging. Salvage and the work of restoration will come later. The epoch will be made interesting and memorable by the series of episodes that seems to be just opening. The younger generation has now an excellent opportunity to see history in the making, for the things that are occurring today can hardly fail to exercise a mighty influence over the nation's future, and an influence for good.

An alliance between the United States and Japan would be an instance of "hands across the sea" from a direction that very likely the war scare makers have not been taking into consideration; but it would be all the more welcome and commendable on that account. A peace agreement is less expensive and much more pleasant than an apprehension of war.

Canada Invites British Settlers

NOTWITHSTANDING that the stream of immigration from the United States into the Canadian northwest continues, and at times seems to be increasing, it appears that the Dominion government is not entirely satisfied with the rate at which the farm lands of the great prairie provinces are being settled. The statistics with regard to our contribution toward the creation of the empire that lies beyond the Red River of the North are interesting. In 1898 the number of migrants from this country to Canada was 2412, or 11 per cent of the total immigration into Canada. In the migration period of the year 1905-06 the total number of Americans entering the Dominion with the declared purpose of taking up their abode there was 57,919, or 30.6 per cent of the total immigration. In the following twelve months the number reached very nearly 60,000, or two-fifths of the total. In twelve years, from Jan. 1, 1897, to March 31, 1909, out of a total of 1,366,655 immigrants to Canada from all quarters, 425,440 were Americans, and the ratio of approximately 50,000 a year has been continued and gives promise of continuing for some time to come.

But, as remarked above, this does not satisfy the Dominion government. There is land enough left to provide homes for tens of thousands of settlers. These must be drawn, it is realized, from other parts of the world. The United States cannot be counted on to do more than it is doing at present. The effort now making is to enlist the attention of British residents, especially those in the congested districts and those more or less submerged in the crowded trades and occupations. Extraordinary inducements are to be offered them and extraordinary opportunities are to be opened for them; and the most encouraging phase of the matter is that the plan, which really looks to wholesale emigration from the British Isles, is meeting with approval in the countries that are most concerned in the movement.

It is part of the great trend back to the soil, too, and to the extent that it will assist in relieving the present foodstuff stringency its benefits will spread far beyond the borders of the Dominion.

It is generally agreed that President Taft had a perfect right to tell the newspaper men what he thought of their kind since the latter are all the time telling the President what they think of him.

THAT prosperous conditions prevail in the steel industry to an eminent degree was shown in graphic manner in the published annual statement this week of the United States Steel Corporation. And as the steel industry is considered almost an infallible barometer of general business conditions, it is gratifying to know that although prices received for steel products last year were about fourteen per cent less than in the year previous, net earnings of the corporation for last year were nearly forty million dollars greater than they were for the preceding twelve months. Gross sales and earnings for last year showed an increase over the preceding year of more than one hundred and sixty-four millions. In view of these enormous figures, when it is considered that the total finished products for sale represented only about seventy-five per cent of the maximum capacity of the corporation's various plants, it is reasonable to expect that with the constantly increasing business the current year will approach if not exceed the record year of 1907.

Nearly every industry in this country has felt the forward impulse, and expansion has become the habit everywhere. The only unfavorable condition apparent at present is to be found in the copper metal trade. But this, it is assumed, is only temporary. Patient holders of copper metal securities may think that a period of small profits covering several years may be a long time to wait for better things, but the hope is entertained that even with the wonderful production of copper that is experienced at present, the demand is bound to increase with the growth of general business so that better prices for the metal and bigger profits will be enjoyed before long, probably before the year is out.

The advance in the Bank of England minimum discount rate from three to four per cent was a development this week that had been generally anticipated by international bankers. This increase was brought about principally by the foreign demand on London for gold and the financial necessities of the English government. Steps are under way for the refunding of a large government loan, which will require the floating of short-term notes. The Bank of England always has exerted itself at times like this to prevent a stringency in the money market. Many thought that the rate would not be raised to more than three and one-half per cent on this occasion, but the higher rate evidently was deemed imperative. Gold exports from New York to London are expected to follow in moderate volume. Monetary conditions in this country have been favorable to business for a long time past. Heavy purchases of American bonds by European investors have greatly helped financial conditions here, and to a certain extent may offset whatever adverse effect the increase in the Bank of England discount rate otherwise might have produced in this country.

Tipless Senate Waiters

NO MORE tips for waiters in the restaurant where the United States senators get their meals. This is the new rule. The Senate has abolished the tipping system in that particular cafe. The change naturally is not popular with the employees of the establishment, some of whom have been there many years. But there may be no call for the bestowal of sympathy, as it was disclosed not long since that a bellboy in a Pittsburg hotel had saved $40,000 in three years from the tip money given him by patrons. Who shall say that the senators have not been as generous as the hotel public? And if they have been, those waiters who wish can retire from service and live on what they have laid by. However, this will not be necessary, for the waiters, under the new order of things, will be allowed to draw salary in the summer when Congress is not in session just the same as when they are serving members of the Senate. They will go on the Senate payroll as laborers.

The practise of tipping is not in harmony with the principles and institutions of this country. Waiters or other employees should be paid by the proprietors, and all patrons should be served with equal promptness and courtesy.

If MR. BRYAN, who appears to be having a fine time touring the South American countries, is perusing the papers these days, he may conclude as he reads of the manner in which the American Congress is carrying on, that after all there are compensations that fall to the lot of a presidential candidate who fails of election.

It is rather distressing to learn that the accounts of the postoffice department are kept in such a manner as to make it impossible to glean from them what branches of the service are conducted with profit and what branches are conducted at a loss. There is a very earnest call for information of an intelligible and comprehensive character with regard to the internal business methods and operations of the postal establishment. There has been a presumption always that the bureau reports submitted to the postmaster general, upon which he has been accustomed to base his estimates, covered all such details as would be required in the management of a great private business enterprise. It turns out that this has been far from the case. Accounts are bulked, mixed, confused, and to a degree that renders it impossible, it is alleged, to say exactly where there are profits and where there are losses in operation.

Until the books are first put in order, everything connected with the financial workings of the department, under such circumstances, must be more or less a matter of conjecture, and it is, in part at least, the idea of Senator Carter to bring about by reorganization of the postoffice department, through the operation of the provisions of his bill, a system of accounting which will pave the way for further and important reforms in this service.

The Business Situation

QUITE recently a newly appointed official of New York city whose duties include the care of the statues in the public grounds of the municipality, announced that he should proceed forthwith to have all such works of marble and bronze cleaned and scoured. The setting forth of his purpose did not meet with the hearty indorsement that he felt he had reason to expect. On the contrary, he was told by some of his brother officials that he had better not do anything to the marbles and bronzes that would make them appear any more conspicuous than they were, and that the more they are hidden from view by dust and verdigris the better for all concerned.

As a matter of course this was a very harsh and extreme opinion regarding the artistic value of sculpture as it is employed in a public manner in our cities. Yet it is the sort of criticism ever being offered by somebody regarding this mode of artistic expression. It exemplifies the American people's lack of appreciation of sculpture, which is a type of art that means most to a people whose artistic natures have been most cultivated. That many sculptured works set up in public places fall short of the purpose intended none will doubt, but that all sculpture should be discredited because some of it is not truly uplifting no open and fair-minded person will admit. Of all the modes of artistic expression, sculpture is the best fitted for public display. Paintings and kindred forms are for indoor enjoyment. They belong very largely within and upon walls. Sculpture is for the park, the boulevard, the plaza. It is art out of doors, in the market place, in the midst of the crowd, under the open sky. It is more significant and impelling than any other form. A fierce light beats about a statue occupying a conspicuous position in a public place. Such a work must challenge the attention of the crowd. No matter what its specific purpose, it must express some universal feeling or sentiment to make its beauty apparent to the multitude of critics, ignorant and informed, that will pass upon it.

It has been pointed out by scholars that it is difficult for an indifferent public to realize what a tremendous part sculpture has taken in history, both sacred and secular. In Assyria, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Italy, France, it is to be seen entwined with religion, war, sport, commerce and pleasure, so that the history of sculpture is the history of those peoples. It is too great a factor in civilization to be lightly esteemed, and it is not too much to hope that America's appreciation of it will increase as the quality of the work continues to advance.

Compliment to West Point

COLONEL BRIDGES, chief of the general staff of the military forces of the commonwealth of Australia, declares that West Point is one of the finest military schools in the world. The commendation of the distinguished foreign visitor is very gratifying to Americans. Of course, we all know that the location of the academy on the beautiful Hudson is ideal, as he says; but he adds that the equipment of the school is of the best and most practical character for the preparation of officers for the army. This is the part of his praise that counts.

Colonel Bridges was selected last summer to represent Australia at the imperial war conference in London, where it was decided that the commonwealth should have a military college. Lord Kitchener appointed Colonel Bridges to undertake the work of preparing the foundation of a new military school, and sent him to this country a few weeks since to study West Point. Colonel Bridges says he was directed to go to West Point instead of Sandhurst, England, because Australia wanted the very best she could get and a military pattern best suited to the peculiar needs of Australia. The visit of the American fleet to the waters of Australia gave that country a new interest in things American, and had something to do with bringing about the trip to West Point to see the operations of a school that has given to military life so many able and distinguished leaders.

West Point has stood the test of time and made a reputation for itself. Its four-year term and the restriction of its educational advantages to those only who intend to enter active military careers strongly appealed to the English war office and to the authorities of Australia, and it is believed that these features will be incorporated in the new royal military college.

CHICAGO was devoted to Theodore Thomas, as everybody familiar with musical history of this country is aware; of more consequence, perhaps, is the fact that it has remained faithful to him and his artistic ideals. It may be something of a surprise to the rest of the country, but it is nevertheless a fact, that with all of its materialism, Chicago for years has been, and continues to be, tenderly solicitous of the welfare of its great orchestral organization, now among the oldest and most firmly established of any in the country.

It was because of this devotion and loyalty that Chicago erected a magnificent home for the Thomas orchestra and put the organization as nearly upon a permanent basis as a human institution can be placed. All but $330,000 of the amount necessary to cover the entire cost of the construction and furnishing of this home was raised at the time. This amount has been outstanding in the form of a mortgage. The other night a few Chicago men at a social gathering raised on the spot $100,000 of this amount, and there are ample assurances now that the remainder will at once be obtained by private subscription.

Aside from this single burden, the financial affairs of the orchestra are in splendid condition. A handsome surplus in earnings is shown annually. With the burden removed, the orchestra will be more than self-sustaining, a fact due not only to the generosity of the friends of good music in Chicago, who have stood by the organization through thick and thin, but to the increasing education of the musical taste of the community caused largely by the orchestra and its influence.

A HALF-MILLION-DOLLAR school as a gift from Mrs. Hetty Green to the youth of New York city will serve to keep the donor's memory true to her name. The giving fashion or habit appears to be growing in force and extent and Mrs. Green's latest offering to the cause of education and creative art adds one more notable contribution to the philanthropies of a year wherein the sum total of charities promises to exceed that of any of its predecessors.

The Value of Sculpture

Chicago and the Thomas Orchestra
